

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. # WORDSWORTH'S POETICAL WORKS.

1821-2.

THE only poems belonging to the years 1821-22 are the Ecclesiastical Sonnets, originally called Ecclesiastical Sketches. These were written at intervals, from 1821 onwards, but the great majority belong to that year. They were first published in 1822, in three parts, 102 Sonnets in all. Ten were added in the edition of 1827, several others in the years 1835 and 1836, and fourteen in 1845,—the final edition of 1850 containing 132.

After Wordsworth's return from the Continent in 1820, he visited the Beaumonts at Coleorton, and as Sir George was then about to build a new Church on his property, conversation turned frequently to ecclesiastical topics, and gave rise to the idea of embodying the history of the Church of England in a series of Ecclesiastical Sketches in verse. The Sonnets Nos. XXXIX, XL, and XLI, in the third series, entitled, "Church to be erected," and "New Churchyard," are probably those to which Wordsworth refers as written first, in memory of his morning walk with Sir George Beaumont to fix the site of the Church: but it was the discussions which were being carried on in the British Parliament and elsewhere, in 1821, on the subject of Catholic Disabilities, that led him to enlarge his idea, and project a series of Sonnets dealing with the whole course of the ecclesiastical history of his country. His brother Christopher had published six volumes of Ecclesiastical Biography; or, the Lives of Eminent Men connected with the History of Religion in England, in 1809, while Dean and Rector of Bocking, and domestic chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Southey's Book of the Church,—to which Wordsworth refers in the Fenwick note prefixed to the series—was not published till 1823; and he tells us, in a note to the edition of 1822, that his own work was far advanced before he was aware that Southey had taken up the subject. As several of the Sonnets, however, are very well illustrated by passages in Southey's book, I have given a number of extracts from the latter work in the editorial notes. Wordsworth's own notes appended to the Sonnets, and others which are added, will show his indebtedness to such writers as Bede, Strype, Foxe, Walton, Whittaker, and Sharon Turner. The subject of the Sonnets on the "Aspects of Christianity in America" were suggested to him by Bishop Doane and Professor Henry Reed, and the completion of the series dealing with offices of the English Liturgy was also suggested by Mr Reed.—Ed.

ECCLESIASTICAL SONNETS.*

IN SERIES.

Comp. 1821. — Pub. 1822.

[My purpose in writing this Series was, as much as possible, to confine my view to the introduction, progress, and operation of the Church in England, both previous and subsequent to the Reformation. The Sonnets were written long before ecclesiastical history and points of doctrine had excited the interest with which they have been recently enquired into and discussed. The former particular is mentioned as an excuse for my having fallen into error in respect to an incident which had been selected as setting forth the height to which the power of the Popedom over temporal sovereignty had attained, and the

* During the month of December, 1820, I accompanied a much-beloved and honoured Friend in a walk through different parts of his estate, with a view to fix upon the site of a new Church which he intended to erect. It was one of the most beautiful mornings of a mild season,—our feelings were in harmony with the cherishing* influences of the scene; and such being our purpose, we were naturally led to look back upon past events with wonder and gratitude, and on the future with hope. Not long afterwards, some of the Sonnets which will be found towards the close of this series were produced as a private memorial of that morning's occupation.

The Catholic Question, which was agitated in Parliament about that time, kept my thoughts in the same course; and it struck me that certain points in the Ecclesiastical History of our Country might advantageously be presented to view in verse. Accordingly, I took up the subject, and what I now offer to the reader was the result.

When this work was far advanced, I was agreeably surprised to find that my friend, Mr Southey, had been engaged with similar views in writing a concise History of the Church in England. If our Productions, thus unintentionally coinciding, shall be found to illustrate each other, it will prove a high gratification to me, which I am sure my friend will participate.

W. WORDSWORTH.

RYDAL MOUNT, January 24, 1822.

For the convenience of passing from one point of the subject to another without shocks of abruptness, this work has taken the shape of a series of Sonnets: but the Reader, it is to be hoped, will find that the pictures are often so closely connected as to have jointly the effect of passages of a poem in a form of stanza to which there is no objection but one that bears upon the Poet only—its difficulty.—W. W., 1822.

* This occurs in all the editions. It may be a misprint for 'cheering.'—Ed.

arrogance with which it was displayed. I allude to the last Sonnet but one in the first series, where Pope Alexander the Third at Venice is described as setting his foot on the neck of the Emperor Barbarossa. Though this is related as a fact in history, I am told it is a mere legend of no authority. Substitute for it an undeniable truth not less fitted for my purpose, namely the penance inflicted by Gregory the Seventh upon the Emperor Henry the Fourth.

Before I conclude my notice of these Sonnets, let me observe that the opinion I pronounced in favour of Laud (long before the Oxford Tract Movement), and which had brought censure upon me from several quarters, is not in the least changed. Omitting here to examine into his conduct in respect to the persecuting spirit with which he has been charged, I am persuaded that most of his aims to restore ritual practices which had been abandoned were good and wise, whatever errors he might commit in the manner he sometimes attempted to enforce them. I further believe that, had not he, and others who shared his opinions and felt as he did, stood up in opposition to the reformers of that period, it is questionable whether the Church would ever have recovered its lost ground and become the blessing it now is, and will, I trust, become in a still greater degree, both to those of its communion and to those who unfortunately are separated from it.]

Convert delight into a Sacrifice.'*

 Now seek upon the heights of Time the source
 Of a HOLY RIVER,† on whose banks are found
 Sweet pastoral flowers, and laurels that have crowned

CONJECTURES.

If there be prophets on whose spirits rest
 Past things, revealed like future, they can tell

‡ It may not be unworthy of note that in this sonnet Wordsworth makes the stream of the Duddon masculine, that of Liberty feminine, and that of the Church neuter.—Ed.

§ Stillingfleet adduces many arguments in support of this opinion, but they are unconvincing. The latter part of this Sonnet refers to a favourite notion of Roman Catholic writers, that Joseph of Arimathea and his companions brought Christianity into Britain, and built a rude church at Glastonbury ; alluded to hereafter, in a passage upon the dissolution of monasteries.—W. W., 1822

And call the Fountain forth by miracle,
 And with dread signs the nascent Stream invest ?
 Or He, whose bonds dropped off, whose prison doors
 Flew open, by an Angel's voice unbarred ? *
 Or some of humbler name, to these wild shores
 Storm-driven ; who, having seen the cup of woe
 Pass from their Master, sojourned here to guard
 The precious Current they had taught to flow ?

TREPIDATION OF THE DRUIDS.

SCREAMS round the Arch-druid's brow the sea-mew †—white
 As Menai's foam ; and toward the mystic ring
 Where Augurs stand, the Future questioning,
 Slowly the cormorant aims her heavy flight,
 Portending ruin to each baleful rite,
 That, in the lapse of ages,<sup>1</sup> hath crept o'er
 Diluvian truths, and patriarchal lore.
 Haughty the bard : can these meek doctrines blight
 His transports ? wither his heroic strains ?
 But all shall be fulfilled ;—the Julian spear
 A way first opened ; ‡ and, with Roman chains,
 The tidings come of Jesus crucified ;
 They come—they spread—the weak, the suffering, hear ;
 Receive the faith, and in the hope abide.

DRUIDICAL EXCOMMUNICATION.

MERCY and Love have met thee on thy road,
 Thou wretched Outcast, from the gift of fire
 And food cut off by sacerdotal ire,
 From every sympathy that Man bestowed !
 Yet shall it claim our reverence, that to God,
 Ancient of days ! that to the eternal Sire,
 These jealous Ministers of law aspire,
 As to the one sole fount whence wisdom flowed,
 Justice, and order. Tremblingly escaped
 As if with prescience of the coming storm,
That intimation when the stars were shaped ;
 And still, 'mid yon thick woods, the primal truth
 Glimmers through many a superstitious form <sup>1</sup>
 That fills the Soul with unavailing ruth.

‡ "The first man who laid down his life in Britain for the Christian faith was Saint Alban. . . . During the tenth, and most rigorous of the persecutions, a Christian priest, flying from his persecutors, came to the City of Verulamium, and took shelter in Alban's house: he, not being of the faith himself, concealed him for pure compassion; but when he observed the devotion of his guest, how fervent it was, and how firm, his heart was touched. . . . When the persecutors came to search the house, Alban, putting on the hair-cassock of his teacher, delivered himself into their hands, as if he had been the fugitive, and was carried before the heathen governor. . . . Because he refused to betray his guest or offer sacrifices to the Roman gods, he was scourged, and then led to execution upon the spot where the abbey now stands, which in after times was erected to his memory, and still bears his

RECOVERY.

As, when a storm hath ceased, the birds regain
 Their cheerfulness, and busily retrim
 Their nests, or chant a gratulating hymn
 To the blue ether and bespangled plain ;
 Even so, in many a re-constructed fane,
 Have the survivors of this Storm renewed
 Their holy rites with vocal gratitude :
 And solemn ceremonials they ordain
 To celebrate their great deliverance ;
 Most feelingly instructed 'mid their fear—
 That persecution, blind with rage extreme,
 May not the less, through Heaven's mild countenance,
 Even in her own despite, both feed and cheer ;
 For all things are less dreadful than they seem.

* The hill at St Alban's must have been an object of great interest to the imagination of the venerable Bede, who thus describes it, with a delicate feeling, delightful to meet with in that rude age, traces of which are frequent in his works:—"Variis herbarum floribus depictus, imò usquequaque vestitus, in quo nihil repente arduum, nihil præceps, nihil

Fair houses, baths, and banquets delicate,
 And temples flashing, bright as polar ice,
 Their radiance through the woods—may yet suffice
 To sap your hardy virtue, and abate
 Your love of Him upon whose forehead sate
 The crown of thorns; whose life-blood flowed, the price
 Of your redemption. Shun the insidious arts
 That Rome provides, less dreading from her frown
 Than from her wily praise, her peaceful gown,
 Language, and letters;—these, though fondly viewed
 As humanising graces, are but parts
 And instruments of deadliest servitude!

DISSENSIONS.

THAT heresies should strike (if truth be scanned Presumptuously) their roots both wide and deep,
 Is natural as dreams to feverish sleep.
 Lo! Discord at the altar dares to stand *
 Uplifting toward <sup>1</sup> high Heaven her fiery brand,
 A cherished Priestess of the new-baptized!
 But chastisement shall follow peace despised.

 And prayers that would undo her forced farewell;
 For she returns not.—Awed by her own knell,

A universal shout of the same word followed, and the hills resounding the echo on all sides, the enemy was struck with dread. . . . They fled in disorder, casting away their arms."—(*Eccles. † The last six lines of this Sonnet are chiefly from the prose of Daniel ; and here I will state (though to the Readers whom this Poem will chiefly interest it is unnecessary) that my obligations to other prose writers are frequent,—obligations which, even if I had not a pleasure in courting, it would have been presumptuous to shun, in treating an historical subject. I must, however, particularise Fuller, to whom I am indebted in the Sonnet upon Wicliffe and in other instances. And upon the acquittal of the Seven Bishops I have done little more than versify a lively description of that event in the MS. Memoirs of the first Lord Lonsdale.—W. W., 1822.

* "Ethelforth reached the convent of Bangor, he perceived the Monks, twelve hundred in number, offering prayers for the success of their countrymen: 'if they are praying against us,' he exclaimed, 'they are fighting against us;' and he ordered them to be first attacked: they were destroyed; and, appalled by their fate, the courage of Brocmail wavered, and he fled from the field in dismay. Thus abandoned by their leader, his army soon gave way, and Ethelforth obtained a decisive conquest. Ancient Bangor itself soon fell into his hands, and was demolished; the noble monastery was levelled to the ground; its library, which is mentioned as a large one, the collection of ages, the repository of the most precious monuments of the ancient Britons, was consumed; half ruined walls, gates, and rubbish were all that remained of the magnificent edifice." —See Turner's valuable history of the Anglo-Saxons.

they came ; and when he was told from the island of Britain, . . . and were Angles, he played upon the word and said, 'Well may they be so called, for they are like Angels.' . . . Then demanding from what province they were brought, the answer was 'from Deira ;' and in the same humour he observed that rightly might this also be said, for de Dei ira, from the wrath of God were they to be delivered. And when he was told that their King was Ælla, he replied that Hallelujahs ought to be sung in his dominions. This trifling sprung from serious thought. From that day the conversion of the Anglo-Saxons become a favourite object with Gregory."—(Southey's Book of the Church, Vol. I., pp. 22, 23).—ED.

According to Bede, "Some days after, the king came into the island and ordered Augustin and his companions to be brought into his presence. . . . They came . . . bearing a silver cross on their banner, and an image of our Lord and Saviour painted on a board ; and singing the litany they offered up their prayers to the Lord for the eternal salvation both of themselves and of those to whom they were come."—(*Eccles. through the wisdom which the true God hath given me, to destroy, for the good example of others, what in foolishness I worshipped? Immediately, casting away vain superstition, he besought the King to grant him what the laws did not allow to a priest, arms and a coursar (equum emmiserarium); which mounting, and furnished with a sword and lance, he proceeded to destroy the Idols. The crowd, seeing this, thought him mad—he however halted not, but approaching he profaned the temple, casting against it the lance which he had held in his hand, and, exulting in acknowledgment of the worship of the true God, he ordered his companions to pull down the temple, with all its enclosures. The place is shown where those idols formerly stood, not far from York, at the source of the river Derwent, and is at this day called Gormund Gaham, "ubi pontifex ille, inspirante Deo vero, polluit ac destruxit eas, quas ipse sacraverat aras." The last expression is a pleasing proof that the venerable monk of Wearmouth was familiar with the poetry of Virgil.—W. W., 1822.

The following is Bede's account of the speech of "another of the king's chief men:"—"The present life of man, O king, seems to me in comparison of that time which is unknown to us, like to the swift flight of a sparrow through the room wherein you sit, at supper in winter, with your commanders and ministers, and a good fire in the midst, whilst the storms of rain and snow prevail abroad. The sparrow, I say—flying in at one door, and immediately out at another—whilst he is within, is safe from the misty storm; but, after a short space of fair weather, he immediately vanishes out of your sight into the dark winter from which he had emerged. So this life of man appears for a short space, but of what went before, and of what is to follow, we are utterly ignorant. If therefore this new doctrine contains something more certain, it seems justly to deserve to be followed."

 Drops, and the God himself is seen no more.
 Temple and Altar sink, to hide their shame
 Amid oblivious weeds, " *O come to me,

 Such Priest, when service worthy of his care
 Has called him forth to breathe the common air,
 Might seem a saintly Image from its shrine

 The Apparition ; evil thoughts are stayed
 At his approach, and low-bowed necks entreat
 A benediction from his voice or hand ;
 Whence grace, through which the heart can understand,
 And vows, that bind the will, in silence made.

Etiam si in itinere pergens inveniretur, accurrebant, et flexâ cervice vel manu signari, vel ore illius se benedici, gaudebant. ## OTHER INFLUENCES.

AH, when the Body,<sup>1</sup> round which in love we clung,
 Is chilled by death, does mutual service fail ?
 Is tender pity then of no avail ?
 Are intercessions of the fervent tongue
 A waste of hope ?—From this sad source have sprung
 Rites that console the Spirit, under grief
 Which ill can brook more rational relief :
 Hence, prayers are shaped amiss, and dirges sung
 For Souls<sup>2</sup> whose doom is fixed ! The way is smooth
 For Power that travels with the human heart :
 Confession ministers the pang to soothe
 In him who at the ghost of guilt doth start.
 Ye holy Men, so earnest in your care,
 Of your own mighty instruments beware !

 His thin autumnal locks where Monks abide
 In cloistered privacy. But not to dwell
 In soft repose he comes. Within his cell,

* Dunstan was made Abbot of Glastonbury by Eadmund, and there he introduced the Benedictine rule, being the first Benedictine Abbot in England. His aim was a remodelling of the Anglo-Saxon Church, "for which," says Southey, "he was qualified by his rank, his connections, his influence at court, his great and versatile talents, and more than all, it must be added, by his daring ambition, which scrupled at nothing for the furtherance of its purpose."—(Book of the Church, I. 6). "Dunstan stands first in the line of ecclesiastical statesmen, who counted among them Langfranc and Wolsey, and ended in Laud." "Raised to the See of Canterbury, he wielded for sixteen years, as the minister of Eadgar, the secular and ecclesiastical powers of the realm."—(Green, I. 6.) * At the command of Pope Innocent III., the Bishops of London, Ely, and Worcester were charged to lay England under an interdict. They did so, in defiance of King John, and left England. Southey's description of the result may be compared with this sonnet. "All the rites of a Church whose policy it was to blend its institutions with the whole business of private life were suddenly suspended: no bell heard, no taper lighted, no service performed, no church open; only baptism was permitted, and confession and sacrament for the dying. The dead were either interred in unhallowed ground, without the presence of a priest, or any religious ceremony, . . . or they were kept unburied. . . . Some little mitigation was allowed, lest human nature should have rebelled against so intolerable a tyranny. The people, therefore, were called to prayers and sermon on the Sunday, in the churchyards, and marriages were performed at the church door."—(Book of the Church, Vol. I., ch. 9, pp. 261-2.)—Ed.

† After Becket's murder and canonization Henry II., from political motives, did penance publicly at his shrine. Clad in a coarse garment, he walked three miles barefoot to Canterbury, and at the shrine submitted to the discipline of the Church. Four bishops, abbots, and eighty clergy were present, each with a knotted cord, and inflicted 380 lashes. Bleeding he threw sackcloth over his shoulders, and continued till midnight kneeling at prayer, then visited all the altars, and returned fainting to Becket's shrine, where he remained till morning.—Ed.

‡ On the festival of the Ascension, John "laid his crown at Pandulph's feet, and signed an instrument by which, for the remission of his sins, and those of his family, he surrendered the kingdoms of England and Ireland to the Pope, to hold them thenceforth under him, and the Roman see." Pandulph "kept the crown five days before he restored it to John."—Southey (Vol. I., p. 218).—Ed.

* Peter Waldo (or Valdo), a rich merchant of Lyons (1160 or 1170), becoming religious, dedicated himself to poverty and almsgiving. Disciples gathered round him; and they were called the poor men of Lyons—a modest, frugal, and industrious order. They were reformers before the Reformation. Peter Waldo exposed the corruption of the clergy, had the four gospels translated for the people, and maintained the rights of the laity to read them to the masses. He was condemned by the Lateran Council in 1179.—Ed.

They suffered persecutions in 1332, 1400, and 1478, but these persecutions only drove them into fresh districts in Europe. Francis I. of France ordered them to be extirpated from Piedmont in 1541, and many were massacred. In 1560 the Duke of Savoy renewed the persecution at the instance of the Papal See. MOTHER! whose virgin bosom was uncrust
 With the least shade of thought to sin allied ;
 Woman! above all women glorified,

 Brighter than eastern skies at daybreak strewn
 With fancied roses, than the unblemished moon
 Before her wane begins on heaven's blue coast ;
 Thy Image falls to earth. Yet some, I ween,
 Not unforgiven the suppliant knee might bend,
 As to a visible Power, in which did blend
 All that was mixed and reconciled in Thee
 Of mother's love with maiden purity,
 Of high with low, celestial with terrene !

AVE MARIA.

Ave Maria! on a thousand thrones
 Raised by the weary hearts that beat to thee,
 As 'neath the softer light the throbbing sea,
 Thy name a spell of peace, in lingering tones
 Is whispered through the world: thy truth condones
 The feebler faith of worshippers that flee,
 Lost in the sovereign awe, to bend the knee
 By pictured holiness or breathing stones.
 Mother of Christ! whom ages old adorn,
 And hundred climes, by gentle thought and deed,
 Forgive the sacrilege, the brandished scorn
 Of the grim guardians of a narrow creed,
 Who fence their folds from Love's serener law,
 And "grate on scranell pipes of wretched straw."

After a short prayer, he put off his clothes with a cheerful countenance and a willing mind. His feet were bare ; his head appeared perfectly bald. Called to abide by his recantation, he stretched forth his right arm, and replied, 'This is the hand that wrote it, and therefore it shall suffer punishment first.' Firm to his purpose, as soon as the flame rose, he held his hand out to meet it, and retained it there steadfastly, so that all the people saw it sensibly burning before the fire reached any other part of his body ; and after he repeated with a loud and firm voice, 'This hand hath offended, this unworthy right hand.' * During Mary's reign, fully 800 of the English clergy and laity sought refuge on the Continent, and they were hospitably received in Switzerland, the Low Countries, and along the Rhine. Some of the best known were Coverdale, Sandys, Jewel, Knox, Whittingham, and Foxe. They lived in Basle, Zurich, Geneva, Strasburg, Worms, and Frankfort ; and it was in the latter town that the dissensions prevailed, referred to in the sonnet. These was unfolded in a Tract entitled The Troubles of Frankfort. The chief point in dispute was the use of the English Book of Common Prayer. Knox and Whittingham, under the guidance of Calvin, wished a modification of this book. The dispute ended in the Frankfort magistrates requesting Knox to leave the city. He retired to Geneva. On the accession of Elizabeth, the Frankfort exiles returned to England.—ED.

MEN, who have ceased to reverence, soon defy
 Their forefathers ; lo ! sects are formed, and split

* The first nonconforming sect in England originated in 1556. It broke off from the Church, simply on a question of vestments. The chief divisions of English Nonconformity in the latter half of the sixteenth century were (1) the Brunists, or Barronists. The disciples of Brun quarrelled and divided amongst themselves. (2) the Familists, an offshoot of the Dutch Anabaptists, a mystic sect which quarrelled with the Puritans. (3) The Anabaptists, who were not only religious sectaries, but who differed with the Church on sundry social and civil matters. "They denied the sanctity of an oath, the binding power of laws, the right of the magistrate to punish, and the rights of property."—(Perry's History of the English Church, p. 315.) See also Hooker, Preface to his Ecclesiastical Polity, c. viii. 6-12 ; and, on the "indigested enthusiastical scheme called The Kingdom of Christ, or of his Saints," the Life of Sir Matthew Hale, *Ecc. In this age a word cannot be said in praise of Laud, or even in compassion for his fate, without incurring a charge of bigotry; but fearless of such imputation, I concur with Hume, "that it is sufficient for his vindication to observe that his errors were the most excusable of all those which prevailed during that zealous period." A key to the right understanding of those parts of his conduct that brought the most odium upon him in his own time, may be found in the following passage of his speech before the bar of the House of Peers:—"Ever since I came in place, I have laboured nothing more than that the external publick worship of God, so much slighted in divers parts of this kingdom, might be preserved, and that with as much decency and uniformity as might be. For I evidently saw that the public neglect of God's service in the outward face of it, and the nasty lying of many places dedicated to that service, had almost cast a damp upon the true and inward worship of God, which, while we live in the body, needs external helps, and all little enough to keep it in any vigour."—W.  PART III.

[When I came to this part of the series I had the dream described in this Sonnet.† The figure was that of my daughter, and the whole passed exactly as here represented. The Sonnet was composed on the middle road leading from Gramere to Ambleside : it was begun as I left the last house of the vale, and finished, word for word as it now stands, before I came in view of Rydal. I wish I could say the same of the five or six hundred I have written : most of them were frequently retouched in the course of composition, and, not a few, laboriously.

I have only further to observe that the intended Church which prompted these Sonnets was erected on Coleorton Moor towards the centre of a very populous parish between three and four miles from Ashby-de-la-Zouch, on the road to Loughborough, and has proved, I believe, a great benefit to the neighbourhood.]

FROM THE RESTORATION TO THE PRESENT TIMES.

I.

I SAW the figure of a lovely Maid
 Seated alone beneath a darksome tree,
 Whose fondly-overhanging canopy
 Set off her brightness with a pleasing shade.
 No Spirit was she ; that<sup>1</sup> my heart betrayed ;
 For she was one I loved exceedingly :
 But while I gazed in tender reverie
 (Or was it sleep that with my Fancy played ?)

† The first of Part III.—Ed.

The bright corporeal presence—form and face—
 Remaining still distinct grew thin and rare,
 Like sunny mist ;—at length the golden hair,
 Shape, limbs, and heavenly features, keeping pace
 Each with the other in a lingering race
 Of dissolution, melted into air.

PATRIOTIC SYMPATHIES.

LAST night, without a voice, that Vision spake
 Fear to my Soul, and sadness which might seem <sup>1</sup>
 Wholly <sup>2</sup> dissevered from our present theme ;
 Yet, my belovèd country ! I partake <sup>3</sup>
 Of kindred agitations for thy sake ;
 Thou, too, dost visit oft <sup>4</sup> my midnight dream ;
 Thy <sup>5</sup> glory meets me with the earliest beam
 Of light, which tells that Morning is awake.

A VOICE, from long-expecting<sup>1</sup> thousands sent
 Shatters the air, and troubles tower and spire ;
 For Justice hath absolved the innocent,
 And Tyranny is balked of her desire :

 And transport finds in every street a vent,
 Till the whole City rings like one vast quire.
 The Fathers urge the People to be still,
 With outstretched hands and earnest speech<sup>2</sup>—in vain !

The Bishops appeared as criminals at the bar of the King's Bench. The jury had been packed, the judges were mere tools of the Crown, but judges and jury were alike overawed by the indignation of the people at large. ## ASPECTS OF CHRISTIANITY IN AMERICA.*

I.—THE PILGRIM FATHERS.†

Pub. 1845.

WELL worthy to be magnified are they
 Who, with sad hearts, of friends and country took
 A last farewell, their loved abodes forsook,
 And hallowed ground in which their fathers lay ;
 Then to the new-found World explored their way,
 That so a Church, unforced, uncalled to brook
 Ritual restraints, within some sheltering nook
 Her Lord might worship and his word obey
 In freedom. Men they were who could not bend ;
 Blest Pilgrims, surely, as they took for guide
 A will by sovereign Conscience sanctified ;
 Blest while their Spirits from the woods ascend
 Along a Galaxy that knows no end,
 But in His glory who for Sinners died.

* In a letter to Professor Henry Reed, dated March 1, 1842, Wordsworth wrote:—"I have sent you three sonnets upon certain 'Aspects of Christianity in America,' having, as you will see, a reference to the subject upon which you wished me to write. I wish they had been more worthy of the subject: I hope, however, you will not disapprove of the connection which I have thought myself warranted in tracing between the Puritan fugitives and Episcopacy."—Ed.

† American episcopacy, in union with the church in England, strictly belongs to the general subject; and I here make my acknowledgments to my American friends, Bishop Doane, and Mr Henry Reed of Philadelphia, for having suggested to me the propriety of adverting to it, and pointed out the virtues and intellectual qualities of Bishop White, which so eminently fitted him for the great work he undertook. Bishop White was consecrated at Lambeth, Feb. 4, 1787, by Archbishop Moore; and before his long life was closed, twenty-six bishops had been consecrated in America, by himself. For his character and opinions, see his own numerous Works, and a "Sermon in commemoration of him, by George Washington Doane, Bishop of New Jersey."—W. W., 1845.

† Among the benefits arising, as Mr Coleridge has well observed, from a Church Establishment of endowments corresponding with the wealth of the country to which it belongs, may be reckoned as eminently important, the examples of civility and refinement which the Clergy, stationed at intervals, afford to the whole people. The established clergy in many parts of England have long been, as they continue to be, the principal bulwark against barbarism, and the link which unites the sequestered peasantry with the intellectual advancement of the age. Nor is it below the dignity of the subject to observe, that their taste, as acting upon rural residences and scenery often furnishes models which country gentlemen, who are more at liberty to follow the caprices of fashion, might profit by. The precincts of an old residence must be treated by ecclesiastics with respect, both from prudence and necessity. I remember being much pleased, some years ago, at Rose Castle, the rural seat of the See of Carlisle, with a style of garden and architecture, which, if the place had belonged to a wealthy layman, would no doubt have been swept away. A parsonage-house generally stands not far from the church; this proximity imposes favourable restraints, and sometimes suggests an affecting union of the accommodations and elegancies of life with the outward signs of piety and mortality.

To the neat mansion, where, his flock among,
 The learned Pastor dwells, their watchful lord.*
 Though meek and patient as a sheathèd sword;
 Though pride's least lurking thought appear a wrong
 To human kind; though peace be on his tongue,
 Gentleness in his heart; can earth afford
 Such genuine state, pre-eminence so free,
 As when, arrayed in Christ's authority,
 He from the pulpit lifts his awful hand;
 Conjures, implores, and labours all he can
 For re-subjecting to divine command
 The stubborn spirit of rebellious man?

With pleasure I recal to mind a happy instance of this in the residence of an old and much-valued Friend in Oxfordshire. The house and church stand parallel to each other, at a small distance; a circular lawn or rather grass-plot, spreads between them; shrubs and trees curve from each side of the dwelling, veiling, but not hiding, the church. From the front of this dwelling, no part of the burial-ground is seen; but as you wind by the side of the shrubs towards the steeple-end of the church, the eye catches a single, small, low, monumental head-stone, moss-grown, sinking into, and gently inclining towards the earth. Advance, and the churchyard, populous and gay with glittering tombstones, opens upon the view. This humble, and beautiful parsonage called forth a tribute, for which see the seventh of the "Miscellaneous Sonnets," Part 3.—W. W. 1822.

 Belovèd Mother ! Thou whose happy hand
 Had bound the flowers I wore, with faithful tie :

Sweet flowers ! at whose inaudible command
 Her countenance, phantom-like, doth re-appear :
 O lost too early for the frequent tear,
 And ill requited by this heartfelt sigh !

CONFIRMATION.

Pub. 1827.

THE Young-ones gathered in from hill and dale,
 With holiday delight on every brow :
 'Tis passed away ; far other thoughts prevail ;
 For they are taking the baptismal Vow
 Upon their conscious selves ; their own lips speak
 The solemn promise. Strongest sinews fail,
 And many a blooming, many a lovely, cheek
 Under the holy fear of God turns pale ;
 While on each head his lawn-robbed Servant lays
 An apostolic hand, and with prayer seals
 The Covenant. The Omnipotent will raise
 Their feeble Souls ; and bear with his regrets,
 Who, looking round the fair assemblage, feels
 That ere the Sun goes down their childhood sets.

CONFIRMATION CONTINUED.

I SAW a Mother's eye intensely bent
 Upon a Maiden trembling as she knelt ;
 In and for whom the pious Mother felt
 Things that we judge of by a light too faint :
 Tell, if ye may, some star-crowned Muse, or Saint !
 Tell what rushed in, from what she was relieved,
 Then, when her Child the hallowing touch received,

And such vibration through<sup>1</sup> the Mother went
 That tears burst forth amain. Did gleams appear?
 Opened a vision of that blissful place
 Where dwells a Sister-child? And was power given
 Part of her lost One's glory back to trace
 Even to this Rite? For thus She knelt, and, ere
 The summer-leaf had faded, passed to Heaven.*

SACRAMENT.

By chain yet stronger must the Soul be tied:
 One duty more, last stage of this ascent,<sup>2</sup>
 Brings to thy food, mysterious Sacrament<sup>3</sup>
 The Offspring, haply at the Parent's side;
 But not till They, with all that do abide
 In Heaven, have lifted up their hearts to laud
 And magnify the glorious name of God,
 Fountain of grace, whose Son for sinners died.
 Ye, who have duly weighed the summons, pause
 No longer; ye,<sup>4</sup> whom to the saving rite
 The Altar calls; come early under laws
 That can secure for you a path of light
 Through gloomiest shade; put on (nor dread its weight)
 Armour divine, and conquer in your cause!

THE MARRIAGE CEREMONY.*

Comp. 1842. — Pub. 1845.

THE Vested Priest before the Altar stands ;
 Approach, come gladly, ye prepared, in sight
 Of God and chosen friends, your troth to plight
 With the symbolic ring, and willing hands
 Solemnly joined. Now sanctify the bands,
 O Father !—to the espoused thy blessing give,
 That mutually assisted they may live
 Obedient, as here taught, to thy commands.
 So prays the Church, to consecrate a Vow
 "The which would endless matrimony make ;"
 Union that shadows forth and doth partake
 A mystery potent human love to endow
 With heavenly, each more prized for the other's sake ;
 Weep not, meek Bride ! uplift thy timid brow.

Comp. 1842. — Pub. 1845.

WOMAN ! the Power who left his throne on high,
 And deigned to wear the robe of flesh we wear,

---

* In a letter to Professor Henry Reed, dated 'Rydal Mount, Sept. 4, 1842,' Wordsworth says : "A few days ago, after a very long interval, I returned to poetical composition ; and my first employment was to write a couple of Sonnets upon subjects recommended by you to take place in the Ecclesiastical Series. They are upon the Marriage Ceremony and the Funeral Service. I have, about the same time, added two others, both upon subjects taken from the Services of our Liturgy."—Ed.

The Power that thro' the straits of Infancy
 Did pass dependent on maternal care,
 His own humanity with Thee will share,
 Pleased with the thanks that in his People's eye
 Thou offerest up for safe Delivery
 From Childbirth's perilous throes. And should the Heir
 Of thy fond hopes hereafter walk inclined
 To courses fit to make a mother rue
 That ever he was born, a glance of mind
 Cast upon this observance may renew
 A better will; and, in the imagined view
 Of thee thus kneeling, safety he may find.

VISITATION OF THE SICK.

Comp. 1842. — Pub. 1845.

THE Sabbath bells renew the inviting peal;
 Glad music! yet there be that, worn with pain
 And sickness, listen where they long have lain,
 In sadness listen. With maternal zeal
 Inspired, the Church sends ministers to kneel
 Beside the afflicted; to sustain with prayer,
 And soothe the heart confession hath laid bare—
 That pardon, from God's throne, may set its seal
 On a true Penitent. When breath departs
 From one disburthened so, so comforted,
 His Spirit Angels greet; and ours be hope
 That, if the Sufferer rise from his sick-bed,
 Hence he will gain a firmer mind, to cope
 With a bad world, and foil the Tempter's arts.

THE COMMINATION SERVICE.

Pub. 1845.

SHUN not this Rite, neglected, yea abhorred
 By some of unreflecting mind, as calling
 Man to curse man,—thought monstrous and appalling.
 Go thou and hear the threatenings of the LORD ;
 Listening within his Temple see his sword
 Unsheathed in wrath to strike the offender's head,
 Thy own, if sorrow for thy sin be dead,
 Guilt unrepented, pardon unimplored.
 Two aspects bears Truth needful for salvation ;
 Who knows not that ?—yet would this delicate age
 Look only on the Gospel's brighter page :
 Let light and dark duly our thoughts employ ;
 So shall the fearful words of Commination
 Yield timely fruit of peace and love and joy.

FORMS OF PRAYER AT SEA.

Pub. 1845.

To kneeling worshippers no earthly floor
 Gives holier invitation than the deck
 Of a storm-shattered vessel saved from wreck
 (When all that man could do availed no more)
 By Him who raised the tempest and restrains.
 Happy the crew who this have felt, and pour
 Forth for His mercy, as the Church ordains,
 Solemn thanksgiving. Nor will they implore
 In vain who, for a rightful cause, give breath
 To words the Church prescribes aiding the lip
 For the heart's sake, ere ship with hostile ship

Encounters, armed for work of pain and death.
 Suppliants! the God to whom your cause ye trust
 Will listen, and ye know that He is just.

FUNERAL SERVICE.

Comp. 1842. — Pub. 1845.

FROM the Baptismal hour, thro' weal and woe,
 The Church extends her care to thought and deed;
 Nor quits the Body when the Soul is freed,
 The mortal weight cast off to be laid low.
 Blest Rite for him who hears in faith, "I know
 That my Redeemer liveth,"—hears each word
 That follows—striking on some kindred chord
 Deep in the thankful heart;—yet tears will flow.
 Man is as grass that springeth up at morn,
 Grows green, and is cut down and withereth
 Ere nightfall—truth that well may claim a sigh,
 Its natural echo; but hope comes reborn
 At JESU's bidding. We rejoice: "O Death,
 Where is thy Sting?—O Grave, where is thy Victory?"

 Through the still church-yard, each with garland gay,
 That, carried sceptre-like, o'ertops the head
 Of the proud Bearer. To the wide church-door,
 Charged with these offerings which their fathers bore
 For decoration in the Papal time,
 The innocent Procession softly moves :—
 The spirit of Laud is pleased in heaven's pure clime,

How had we then rejoiced! But we have felt,
As a loved substance, their futurity:

 Yon reverend hawthorns, hardened to the rod
 Of winter storms, yet budding cheerfully;
 Those forest oaks of Druid memory,
 Shall long survive, to shelter the Abode
 Of genuine Faith. Where, haply, 'mid this band
 Of daisies, shepherds sate of yore and wove

MEMORY.

Comp. 1823. — Pub. 1827.

A PEN—to register ; a key—
That winds through secret wards ;
Are well assigned to Memory
By allegoric Bards.

As aptly, also, might be given
A Pencil to her hand ;
That, softening objects, sometimes even
Outstrips the heart's demand ;

That smoothes foregone distress, the lines
Of lingering care subdues,
Long-vanished happiness refines,
And clothes in brighter hues ;

Yet, like a tool of Fancy, works
Those Spectres to dilate
That startle Conscience, as she lurks
Within her lonely seat.

O ! that our lives, which flee so fast,
In purity were such,
That not an image of the past
Should fear that pencil's touch !

Retirement then might hourly look
Upon a soothing scene,

Age steal to his allotted nook
Contented and serene ;

With heart as calm as lakes that sleep,
In frosty moonlight glistening ;
Or mountain rivers, where they creep
Along a channel smooth and deep,
To their own far-off murmurs listening.

[After thanking Lady Fleming in prose for the service she had done to her neighbourhood by erecting this Chapel, I have nothing to say beyond the expression of regret that the architect did not furnish an elevation better suited to the site in a narrow mountain-pass, and, what is of more consequence, better constructed in the interior for the purposes of worship. It has no chancel ; the altar is unbecomingly confined ; the pews are so narrow as to preclude the possibility of kneeling with comfort ; there is no vestry ; and what ought to have been first mentioned, the font, instead of standing at its proper place at the entrance, is thrust into the farther end of a pew. When these defects shall be pointed out to the munificent Patroness, they will, it is hoped, be corrected.*] particular case, by the point in the horizon, at which the sun rose upon the day of the saint to whom the church was dedicated.* These observances of our ancestors, and the causes of them, are the subject of the following stanzas.

WHEN in the antique age of bow and spear
And feudal rapine clothed with iron mail,
Came ministers of peace, intent to rear
The Mother Church in yon sequestered vale ; †

Then, to her Patron Saint a previous rite
Resounded with deep swell and solemn close,
Through unremitting vigils of the night,
Till from his couch the wished-for Sun uprose.

He rose, and straight—as by divine command,
They, who had waited for that sign to trace
Their work's foundation, gave with careful hand
To the high altar its determined place ;

Mindful of Him who in the Orient born
There lived, and on the cross his life resigned,
And who, from out the regions of the morn,
Issuing in pomp, shall come to judge mankind.

So taught their creed ;—nor failed the eastern sky,
'Mid these more awful feelings, to infuse
The sweet and natural hopes that shall not die,
Long as the sun his gladsome course renews.

visited these celebrated ladies who had retired, as one may say, into notice in this vale. Their cottage lay directly in the road between London and Dublin, and they were of course visited by their Irish friends as well as innumerable strangers. They took much delight in passing jokes on our friend Jones's plumpness, ruddy cheeks and smiling countenance, as little suited to a hermit living in the Vale of Meditation. We all thought there was ample room for retort on his part, so curious was the appearance of these ladies, so elaborately sentimental about themselves and their Caro Albergo as they named it in an inscription on a tree that stood opposite, the endearing epithet being preceded by the word Ecco! calling upon the saunterer to look about him. So oddly was one of these ladies attired that we took her, at a little distance, for a Roman Catholic priest, with a crucifix and relics hung at his neck. They were without caps, their hair bushy and white as snow, which contributed to the mistake.]

attachment ; and, having an extreme love of independence, they withdrew from society, and settled in this remote and secluded cottage. Lady Butler died in 1829, aged ninety, and Miss Ponsonby in 1831, aged seventy-six, their faithful servant, Mary Caroll, having predeceased them. The three are buried in the same grave in Llangollen Churchyard, and an inscription to the memory of each is carved on a triangular pillar beside their tomb.

In a letter to Sir George Beaumont from Hindwell, Radnorshire, Wordsworth gives an account of this tour in North Wales . . . "We turned from the high road three or four miles to visit the 'Valley of Meditation,' (Glyn Mavyr) where Mr Jones has, at present, a curacy with a comfortable parsonage. We slept at Corwen, and went down the Dee to Llangollen, which you and dear Lady B. know well. Called upon the celebrated Recluses, who hoped that you and Lady B. had not forgotten them. . . . * The Devil's Bridge in North Wales is at Hafod, near Aberystwith, in Cardiganshire. Like the Teufelsbrücke, on the road from Göschenen to Airolo, over the St Gothard in Switzerland, which spans the Reuss, the Devil's Bridge in Wales is double ; i.e., an upper and an under bridge span the river Mynach. This Pont-y-Mynach was built either by the monks of Strata Florida, or by the Knights Hospitallers.

In the letter to Sir George Beaumont, referred to in a previous note, Wordsworth writes : " We went up the Rhydiol to the Devil's Bridge, where we passed the following day in exploring these two rivers, and Hafod in the neighbourhood. I had seen these things long ago, but either my memory or my powers of observation had not done them justice. It rained heavily in the night, and we saw the waterfalls in perfection. While Dora was attempting to make a sketch from the chasm in the rain, I composed by her side the following address to the torrent,

1824.<sup>1</sup>

Comp. 1824. — Pub. 1827.

[On Mrs Fermor. This lady had been a widow long before I knew her. Her husband was of the family of the lady celebrated in the "Rape of the Lock," and was, I believe, a Roman Catholic. The sorrow which his death caused her was fearful in its character as described in this poem, but was subdued in course of time by the strength of her religious faith. I have been for many weeks at a time, an inmate with her at Coleorton Hall, as were also Mrs Wordsworth and my sister. The truth in the sketch of her character here given was acknowledged with gratitude by her nearest relatives. She was eloquent in conversation, energetic upon public matters, open in respect to those, but slow to communicate her personal feelings; upon these she never touched in her intercourse with me, so that I could not regard myself as her confidential friend, and was accordingly surprised when I learnt she had left me a legacy of £100, as a token of her esteem. See in further illustration the second stanza inscribed upon her cenotaph in Coleorton church.]

O FOR a dirge! But why complain?
Ask rather a triumphal strain

 Whose life was, like the violet, sweet,
 As climbing jasmine, pure—

As snowdrop on an infant's grave,
 Or lily heaving with the wave
 That feeds it and defends ;
 As Vesper, ere the star hath kissed
 The mountain top, or breathed the mist
 That from the vale ascends.

Thou takest not away, O Death !
 Thou strikest<sup>1</sup>—absence perisheth,
 Indifference is no more ;
 The future brightens on our sight ;
 For on the past hath fallen a light
 That tempts us to adore.

Thou strik'st—and . . . . . 1827.

In a letter from Mrs Wordsworth to Lady Beaumont, dated "Rydal Mount, Feb. 25," she says :—

"We are all much moved by the manner in which Miss Wills has received the verses,—particularly Wm., who feels himself more than rewarded for the labour I cannot call it of the composition—for the tribute was poured forth with a deep stream of fervour that was something beyond labour, and it has required very little correction. In one instance a single word in the "Address to Sir George" is changed since we sent the copy, viz : 'graciously' for 'courteously,' as being a word of more dignity."

The following inscription was "copied from the Churchyard of Claynes, Sept. 14, 1826," by Dorothy Wordsworth, in a MS. book containing numerous epitaphs on tombstones, and inscriptions on rural monuments in cathedrals and churches, in the various parts of the country.

Sacred
 To the memory of Frances Fermor,
 Relict of Henry Fermor, Esqre.,
 Of Fritwell, in the County of Oxford,
 And eldest Daughter of the late
 John Willes, Esqre., of Astrop, in the county
 Of Northamptonshire, who departed this life,
 Dec. 5th, 1824, aged 68 years.
 I am the way, the truth, and
 The life. Whoso cometh to me
 I will in no wise cast out.

CENOTAPH.

In affectionate remembrance of Frances Fermor, whose remains are deposited in the church of Claines, near Worcester, this stone is erected by her sister, Dame Margaret, wife of Sir George Beaumont, Bart., who, feeling not less than the love of a brother for the deceased, commends this memorial to the care of his heirs and successors in the possession of this place.

[See "Elegiac Stanzas. (Addressed to Sir G. H. B., upon the death of his sister-in-law.)"]

By vain affections unenthralled,
 Though resolute when duty called
 To meet the world's broad eye,
 Pure as the holiest cloistered nun
 That ever feared the tempting sun,
 Did Fermor live and die.

This Tablet, hallowed by her name,<sup>1</sup>
 One heart-relieving tear may claim ;

This cenotaph that bears her name,

MS. Letter of Mrs Wordsworth to Lady
 Beaumont.

This sacred stone that bears her name,

Another MS. copy of the Poem sent by Mrs
 Wordsworth to Lady Beaumont.

But if the pensive gloom
Of fond regret be still thy choice,
Exalt thy spirit, hear the voice
Of Jesus from her tomb!

‘I AM THE WAY, THE TRUTH, AND THE LIFE.’

In the letter to Lady Beaumont, referred to in the notes, the title of this poem is “Inscription in the Church of Coleorton,” and a footnote is added, “Say, to the left of the vista, within the thicket, below the churchyard wall.—M. W.”

Mrs Wordsworth also says, “To fit the lines, intended for an urn, for a Monument, W. has altered the closing stanza, which (though they are not what he would have produced had he first cast them with a view to the Church) he hopes you will not disapprove.”—Ed.

EPITAPH

IN THE CHAPEL-YARD OF LANGDALE, WESTMORELAND.

Comp. 1824. — Pub. 1842.

[OWEN LLOYD, the subject of this epitaph, was born at Old Brathay, near Ambleside, and was the son of Charles Lloyd and his wife Sophia (née Pemberton), both of Birmingham, who came to reside in this part of the country, soon after their marriage. They had many children, both sons and daughters, of whom the most remarkable was the subject of this epitaph. He was educated under Mr Dawes, at Ambleside, Dr Butler, of Shrewsbury, and lastly at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he would have been greatly distinguished as a scholar but for inherited infirmities of bodily constitution, which, from early childhood, affected his mind. His love for the neighbourhood in which he was born, and his sympathy with the habits and characters of the mountain yeomanry, in conjunction with irregular spirits, that unfitted him for facing duties in situations to which he was unaccustomed, induced him to accept the retired curacy of Langdale. How much he was beloved and honoured there, and with what feelings he discharged his duty under the oppression of severe malady, is set forth, though imperfectly, in the epitaph.]

By playful smiles, (alas! too oft
A sad heart's sunshine) by a soft
And gentle nature, and a free
Yet modest hand of charity,

Through life was OWEN LLOYD endeared
 To young and old ; and how revered
 Had been that pious spirit, a tide
 Of humble mourners testified,
 When, after pains dispensed to prove
 The measure of God's chastening love,
 Here, brought from far, his corse found rest,—
 Fulfilment of his own request ;—
 Urged less for this Yew's shade, though he
 Planted with such fond hope the tree ;
 Less for the love of stream and rock,
 Dear as they were, than that his Flock,
 When they no more their Pastor's voice
 Could hear to guide them in their choice
 Through good and evil, help might have,
 Admonished, from his silent grave,
 Of righteousness, of sins forgiven,
 For peace on earth and bliss in heaven.

This commemorative epitaph to the Rev. Owen Lloyd is carved on the headstone over his grave in the churchyard at the small hamlet of Chapel Stile, Great Langdale, Westmoreland.—Ed.

1825.

Three Poems were written in 1825, The Pillar of Trajan, The Parrot and the Wren, and the lines To a Skylark.

THE PILLAR OF TRAJAN.

Comp. 1825. — Pub. 1827.

[These verses perhaps had better be transferred to the class of "Italian Poems." I had observed in the newspaper, that the Pillar of Trajan was given as a subject for a prize-poem in English verse. I had a wish perhaps that my son, who was then an undergraduate at Oxford, should try his fortune, and I told him so ; but he, not having been accustomed to write verse, wisely declined to enter on the task ; whereupon I showed him these lines as a proof of what might, without difficulty, be done on such a subject.]

WHERE towers are crushed, and unforbidden weeds
 O'er mutilated arches shed their seeds ;
 And temples, doomed to milder change, unfold
 A new magnificence that vies with old ;
 Firm in its pristine majesty hath stood
 A votive Column, spared by fire and flood :—
 And, though the passions of man's fretful race
 Have never ceased to eddy round its base,
 Not injured more by touch of meddling hands
 Than a lone obelisk, 'mid Nubian sands,
 Or aught in Syrian deserts left to save
 From death the memory of the good and brave.
 Historic figures round the shaft embost
 Ascend, with lineaments in air not lost :
 Still as he turns, the charmed spectator sees
 Group winding after group with dream-like ease,

Triumphs in sunbright gratitude displayed,*
 Or softly stealing into modest shade.
 —So, pleased with purple clusters to entwine
 Some lofty elm-tree, mounts the daring vine;
 The woodbine so, with spiral grace, and breathes
 Wide-spreading odours from her flowery wreaths.

Borne by the Muse from rills in shepherds' ears
 Murmuring but one smooth story for all years,
 I gladly commune with the mind and heart
 Of him who thus survives by classic art,
 His actions witness, venerate his mien,
 And study Trajan as by Pliny seen;
 Behold how fought the Chief whose conquering sword
 Stretched far as earth might own a single lord;
 In the delight of moral prudence schooled,
 How feelingly at home the Sovereign ruled;
 Best of the good—in pagan faith allied
 To more than Man, by virtue deified.

Memorial Pillar! 'mid the wrecks of Time
 Preserve thy charge with confidence sublime—
 The exultations, poms, and cares of Rome,
 Whence half the breathing world received its doom;
 Things that recoil from language; that, if shown
 By apter pencil, from the light had flown.

---

* As Wordsworth says, in his note of 1827, "Here and infra, see Forsyth," it may be interesting to add Forsyth's account of the Pillar, in footnotes. "Trajan's Column, considered as a long historical record to be read round and round a long convex surface, made perspective impossible. Every perspective has one fixed point of view, but here are ten thousand. The eye, like the relievos of the column, must describe a spiral round them, widening over the whole piazza. Hence, to be legible the figures must be lengthened as they rise. This licence is necessary here; but in architecture it may be contested against Vitruvius himself."—Forsyth's Remarks on Antiquities, Arts, and Letters, during an Excursion in Italy in 1802-3, pp. 250, 251.—Ed.

A Pontiff, Trajan here the Gods implores,
There greets an Embassy from Indian shores ;
 Lo ! he harangues his cohorts—there the storm
 Of battle meets him in authentic form !
 Unharnessed, naked, troops of Moorish horse
 Sweep to the charge ;* more high, the Dacian force
 To hoof and finger mailed ;†—yet, high or low,
 None bleed, and none lie prostrate but the foe ; ‡
 In every Roman, through all turns of fate,
 Is Roman dignity inviolate ;
 Spirit in him pre-eminent, who guides, §
 Supports, adorns, and over all presides ;
 Distinguished only by inherent state
 From honoured Instruments that round him wait, ||
 Rise as he may, his grandeur scorns the test
 Of outward symbol, nor will deign to rest
 On aught by which another is deprest.
 —Alas ! that One thus disciplined could toil

“ There the Taranatians, in complete mail down to the fingers and the hoofs. It exhibits without embellishment all the tactics of that age, and forms grand commentary on Vegetius and Frontinus.”—Forsyth, p. 252.—ED.

‡ “ How unlike the modern relieves, where dress appears in all its distinctions, and prostration in all its angles ! none kneel here but priests and captives ; no Roman appears in a fallen state : none are wounded or slain but the foe.”—Forsyth, p. 251.

No monument gives the complete and real costume of its kind so correctly as this column. . . . On this column we can see parts of the subarmalia ; we can see real drawers falling down to the officers' legs ; and some figures have focollia, like invalids, round the neck.—ED.

§ “ This column is an immense field of antiquities, where the emperor appears in a hundred different points, as sovereign, as general, as priest.”—Forsyth, p. 251.—ED.

|| “ His dignity he derives from himself or his duties ; not from the trappings of power, for he is dressed like any of his officers, not from the debasement of others, for the Romans stand bold and erect before him.”—ED.

To enslave whole nations on their native soil ;
 So emulous of Macedonian fame,
 That, when his age was measured with his aim,
 He drooped, 'mid else unclouded victories,
 And turned his eagles back with deep-drawn sighs ;
 O weakness of the Great ! O folly of the Wise !

Where now the haughty Empire that was spread
 With such fond hope ? her very speech is dead ;
 Yet glorious Art the power of Time defies,
 And Trajan still, through various enterprise,
 Mounts, in this fine illusion, toward the skies :
 Still are we present with the imperial Chief,
 Nor cease to gaze upon the bold Relief
 Till Rome, to silent marble unconfined,
 Becomes with all her years a vision of the Mind.

Trajan's Column was set up by the Senate and people of Rome, in honour of the Emperor, about 114 A.D. It is one of the most remarkable pillars in the world ; and still stands, little injured by time, in the centre of the Forum Trajanum (now a ruin) ; its height—132 feet—marking the height of the earth removed when the Forum was made. On the pedestal bas-reliefs were carved in series showing the arms and armour of the Romans ; and round the shaft of the column similar reliefs, exhibiting pictorially the whole story of the Decian campaign of the Emperor. These are of great value as illustrating the history of the period, the costume of the Roman soldiers and the barbarians. A colossal statue of Trajan crowned the column ; and, when it fell, Pope Sixtus V. replaced it by a figure of St Peter. It is referred to by Pausanias (v. 12. 6) and by all the ancient topographers. See a minute account of it, with excellent illustrations, in Hertzberg's Geschichte des Römischen Kaiserreiches, pp. 330-345 (Berlin : 1880) ; also Müller's Denkmäler der Alten Kunst, p. 51. The book, however, from which Wordsworth gained his information of this pillar was evidently Joseph Forsyth's Remarks on Antiquities, Arts, and Letters, during an Excursion in Italy in 1802-3 (London : 1813). It is thus that Dean Merivale speaks of it :—

 “ the great object to which the eye was principally directed was the column, which rose majestically in the centre of the forum to the height of 126 feet, sculptured from the base of the shaft to the summit

with the story of the Decian wars, shining in every volute and moulding, with gold and pigments, and crowned with the colossal effigy of the august conqueror. . . . The proportions of the Trajan column are peculiarly graceful; the compact masses of stone, nineteen in number, of which the whole shaft is composed, may lead us to admire the skill employed in its construction; but the most interesting feature of this historic monument is the spiral band of figures which throughout enriches it. To the subjects of Trajan himself, this record of his exploits in bold relief must have given a vivid and sufficient idea of the people, the places, and the actions indicated; even to us, after so many centuries, they furnish a correct type of the arms, the arts, and the costume both of the Romans and barbarians which we should vainly seek for elsewhere. The Trajan column forms a notable chapter in the pictorial history of Rome."—History of the Romans under the Empire (vol. viii., pp. 46, 47).

In the Fenwick note, Wordsworth mentions that what gave rise to this poem was his observing in the newspapers that "the Pillar of Trajan" was prescribed as a subject for a prize poem at Oxford. This determines the date of composition. The Pillar of Trajan was the Newdigate prize poem, won by W. W. Tireman, Wadham Coll., in 1826. We may therefore assume that the subject was proposed about the summer of 1825.

The Fenwick note to this poem mentions that the author's son having declined to attempt to compete for the Oxford prize poem on "The Pillar of Trajan," his father wrote it, to show him how the thing might be done. This son—the Rev. John Wordsworth of Brigham—wrote Latin verse, however, with considerable success; and as specimens of the poetic work of Dorothy Wordsworth, the poet's sister, and of Sarah Hutchinson, his sister-in-law, are included in these volumes, the following Epistola ad Patrem suum, written at Madeira in 1844, may be reproduced.—Ed.

THE PARROT AND THE WREN.<sup>1</sup>

Comp. 1825. — Pub. 1827.

[The Parrot belonged to Mrs Luff while living at Fox-Ghyll. The wren was one that haunted for many years the summer-house between the two terraces at Rydal Mount.]

WITHIN her gilded cage confined,
 I saw a dazzling Belle,
 A Parrot of that famous kind
 Whose name is NON-PAREIL.

The Contrast . . . . . 1827.

* Ventus ex Africa.—Lest.

Like beads of glossy jet her eyes ;
 And, smoothed by Nature's skill,
 With pearl or gleaming agate vies
 Her finely-curved bill.

Her plummy mantle's living hues,
 In mass opposed to mass,
 Outshine the splendour that imbues
 The robes of pictured glass.

And, sooth to say, an apter Mate
 Did never tempt the choice
 Of feathered Thing most delicate
 In figure and in voice.

But, exiled from Australian bowers,
 And singleness her lot,
 She trills her song with tutored powers,
 Or mocks each casual note,

No more of pity for regrets
 With which she may have striven !
 Now but in wantonness she frets,
 Or spite, if cause be given ;

Arch, volatile, a sportive bird
 By social glee inspired ;
 Ambitious to be seen or heard,
 And pleased to be admired !

II.

THIS moss-lined shed, green, soft, and dry,
 Harbours a self-contented Wren,
 Not shunning man's abode, though shy,
 Almost as thought itself, of human ken.

Strange places, coverts unendeared,
 She never tried ; the very nest
 In which this Child of Spring was reared,
 Is warmed, thro' winter, by her feathery breast.

To the bleak winds she sometimes gives
 A slender unexpected strain ;
 Proof that <sup>1</sup> the hermitess still lives,
 Though she appear not, and be sought in vain.

Say, Dora ! tell me, by yon placid moon,
 If called to choose between the favourite pair,
 Which would you be,—the bird of the saloon,
 By lady-fingers tended with nice care,
 Caressed, applauded, upon dainties fed,
 Or Nature's DARKLING of this mossy shed ?

The "moss-lined shed, green, soft, and dry," still remains at Rydal Mount, as it was in the poet's time.—Ed.

TO A SKYLARK.

Comp. 1825. — Pub. 1827.

[Written at Rydal Mount.]

ETHEREAL minstrel ! pilgrim of the sky !
 Dost thou despise the earth where cares abound ?
 Or, while the wings aspire, are heart and eye
 Both with thy nest upon the dewy ground ?
 Thy nest which thou canst drop into at will,
 Those quivering wings composed, that music still !
 Leave to the nightingale her shady wood ;
 A privacy of glorious light is thine :

Whence thou dost pour upon the world a flood
 Of harmony, with instinct<sup>1</sup> more divine:
 Type of the wise who soar, but never roam;
 True to the kindred points of Heaven and Home!<sup>2</sup>

Compare this with the earlier poem To a Skylark, written in 1805, and both poems with Shelley's still finer lyric to the same bird, written in 1820. See also the Morning Exercise (1828), stanzas 5-10.—Ed.

1826.

The poems composed in 1826 were four. They include two referring to the month of May, and two descriptive of places near Rydal Mount.—Ed.

<sup>2</sup> To the last point of vision, and beyond,
 Mount, daring warbler! that love-prompted strain,
 ('Twixt thee and thine an ever failing bond)
 Thrills not the less the bosom of the plain:
 Yet might'st thou seem, proud privilege! to sing
 All independent of the leafy spring (Second Stanza, To a Skylark.) 1827-48.
 See p. 177.

Pine not like them with arms across,
 Forgetting in thy care
 How the fast-rooted trees can toss
 Their branches in mid air.

The humblest rivulet will take
 Its own wild liberties ;
 And, every day, the imprisoned lake
 Is flowing in the breeze.

Then, crouch no more on suppliant knee,
 But scorn with scorn outbrave ;
 A Briton, even in love, should be
 A subject, not a slave !

O D E,

COMPOSED ON MAY MORNING.

Comp. 1826. — Pub. 1835.

[This and the following poem originated in the lines, "How delicate the leafy veil," &c. My daughter and I left Rydal Mount upon a tour through our mountains, with Mr and Mrs Carr, * in the month of May, 1826, and as we were going up the Vale of Newlands I was struck with the appearance of the little chapel gleaming through the veil of half-opened leaves ; and the feeling which was then conveyed to my mind was expressed in the stanza referred to above. As in the case of "Liberty" and "Humanity," my first intention was to write only one poem, but subsequently I broke it into two, making additions to each part so as to produce a consistent and appropriate whole.]

WHILE from the purpling east departs
 The star that led the dawn,
 Blithe Flora from her couch upstarts,
 For May is on the lawn. †
 A quickening hope, a freshening glee,
 Foreran the expected Power,
 Whose first-drawn breath, from bush and tree,
 Shakes off that pearly shower.

All Nature welcomes Her whose sway
 Tempers the year's extremes ;
 Who scattereth lustres o'er noon-day,
 Like morning's dewy gleams ;
 While mellow warble, sprightly trill,
 The tremulous heart excite ;
 And hums the balmy air to still
 The balance of delight.

Time was, blest Power ! when youths and maids
 At peep of dawn would rise,
 And wander forth in forest glades
 Thy birth to solemnize.
 Though mute the song—to grace the rite
 Untouched the hawthorn bow,
 Thy Spirit triumphs o'er the slight ;
 Man changes, but not Thou !

Thy feathered Lieges bill and wings
 In love's disport employ ;
 Warmed by thy influence, creeping things
 Awake to silent joy :
 Queen art thou still for each gay plant
 Where the slim wild deer roves ;
 And served in depths where fishes haunt
 Their own mysterious groves.

Cloud-piercing peak, and trackless heath,
 Instinctive homage pay ;
 Nor wants the dim-lit cave a wreath
 To honour thee, sweet May !
 Where cities fanned by thy brisk airs
 Behold a smokeless sky,
 Their puniest flower-pot-nursling dares
 To open a bright eye.

And if, on this thy natal morn,
 The pole, from which thy name
 Hath not departed, stands forlorn
 Of song and dance and game ;
 Still from the village-green a vow
 Aspires to thee address,
 Wherever peace is on the brow,
 Or love within the breast.

Yes ! where Love nestles thou canst teach
 The soul to love the more ;
 Hearts also shall thy lessons reach
 That never loved before :
 Stript is the haughty one of pride
 The bashful freed from fear,
 While rising, like the ocean-tide,
 In flows the joyous year.

Hush, feeble lyre ! weak words refuse
 The service to prolong !
 To yon exulting thrush the Muse
 Entrusts the imperfect song ;
 His voice shall chant, in accents clear,
 Throughout the live-long day,
 Till the first silver star appear,
 The sovereignty of May.

TO MAY.

Comp. 1826-34. — Pub. 1835.

THOUGH many suns have risen and set
 Since thou, blithe May, wert born.
 And Bards, who hailed thee, may forget
 Thy gifts, thy beauty scorn ;

There are who to a birthday strain
 Confine not harp and voice,
 But evermore throughout thy reign
 Are grateful and rejoice !

Delicious odours ! music sweet,
 Too sweet to pass away !
 Oh for a deathless song to meet
 The soul's desire—a lay
 That, when a thousand years are told,
 Should praise thee, genial Power !
 Through summer heat, autumnal cold,
 And winter's dreariest hour.

Earth, sea, thy presence feel—nor less,
 If yon ethereal blue
 With its soft smile the truth express,
 The heavens have felt it too:
 The inmost heart of man if glad
 Partakes a livelier cheer ;
 And eyes that cannot but be sad
 Let fall a brightened tear.

Since thy return, through days and weeks
 Of hope that grew by stealth,
 How many wan and faded cheeks
 Have kindled into health !
 The Old, by thee revived, have said,
 “ Another year is ours ; ”
 And wayward Wanderers, poorly fed,
 Have smiled upon thy flowers.

Who tripping lips a merry song
 Amid his playful peers ?
 The tender Infant who was long
 A prisoner of fond fears ;

But now, when every sharp-edged blast
 Is quiet in its sheath,
 His Mother leaves him free to taste
 Earth's sweetness in thy breath.

Thy help is with the weed that creeps
 Along the humblest ground ;
 No cliff so bare but on its steeps
 Thy favours may be found ;
 But most on some peculiar nook
 That our own hands have drest,
 Thou and thy train are proud to look,
 And seem to love it best.

And yet how pleased we wander forth
 When May is whispering, " Come !
 " Choose from the bowers of virgin earth
 " The happiest for your home ;
 " Heaven's bounteous love through me is spread
 " From sunshine, clouds, winds, waves,
 " Drops on the mouldering turret's head,
 " And on your turf-clad graves ! "

Such greeting heard, away with sighs
 For lilies that must fade,
 Or ' the rathe primrose as it dies
 Forsaken ' in the shade !
 Vernal fruitions and desires
 Are linked in endless chase ;
 While, as one kindly growth retires,
 Another takes its place.

And what if thou, sweet May, hast known
 Mishap by worm and blight ;

If expectations newly blown
 Have perished in thy sight ;
 If loves and joys, while up they sprung,
 Were caught as in a snare ;
 Such is the lot of all the young,
 However bright and fair.

Lo ! Streams that April could not check
 Are patient of thy rule ;
 Gurgling in foamy water-break,
 Loitering in grassy pool :
 By thee, thee only, could be sent
 Such gentle mists as glide,
 Curling with unconfirmed intent,
 On that green mountain's side.

How delicate the leafy veil
 Through which yon house of God
 Gleams 'mid the peace of this deep dale *
 By few but shepherds trod !
 And lowly huts, near beaten ways,
 No sooner stand attired
 In thy fresh wreaths, than they for praise
 Peep forth, and are admired.

Season of fancy and of hope,
 Permit not for one hour
 A blossom from thy crown to drop,
 Nor add it to a flower !
 Keep, lovely May, as if by touch
 Of self-restraining art,
 This modest charm of not too much,
 Part seen, imagined part !

["No faculty yet given me to espy
The dusky Shape within her arms imbound."]'

Afterwards, when I could not avoid seeing it, I wondered at this, and the more so because, like most children, I had been in the habit of watching the moon through all her changes, and had often continued to gaze at it when at the full till half blinded.]

"Late, late yestreen I saw the new moone
Wi' the auld moone in hir arme."

Ballad of Sir Patrick Spence, Percy's Reliques.

ONCE I could hail (howe'er serene the sky)
The Moon re-entering her monthly round,
No faculty yet given me to espy
The dusky Shape within her arms imbound,
That thin memento of effulgence lost
Which some have named her Predecessor's ghost,

Young, like the Crescent that above me shone,
Nought I perceived within it dull or dim ;
All that appeared was suitable to One
Whose fancy had a thousand fields to skim ;
To expectations spreading with wild growth,
And hope that kept with me her plighted troth.

I saw (ambition quickening at the view)
A silver boat launched on a boundless flood ;
A pearly crest, like Dian's when it threw
Its-brightest splendour round a leafy wood ;

But not a hint from under-ground, no sign
Fit for the glimmering brow of Proserpine.*

Or was it Dian's self* that seemed to move
Before me? nothing blemished the fair sight;
On her I looked whom jocund Fairies love,
Cynthia,* who puts the little stars to flight,
And by that thinning magnifies the great,
For exaltation of her sovereign state.

And when I learned to mark the spectral Shape
As each new Moon obeyed the call of Time,
If gloom fell on me, swift was my escape;
Such happy privilege hath life's gay Prime,
To see or not to see, as best may please
A buoyant Spirit, and a heart at ease.

Now, dazzling Stranger! when thou meet'st my glance,
Thy dark Associate ever I discern;
Emblem of thoughts too eager to advance
While I salute my joys, thoughts sad or stern;
Shades of past bliss, or phantoms that, to gain
Their fill of promised lustre, wait in vain.

So changes mortal Life with fleeting years;
A mournful change, should Reason fail to bring
The timely insight that can temper fears,
And from vicissitude remove its sting;
While Faith aspires to seats in that domain
Where joys are perfect—neither wax nor wane.

† Referring to the Roman wall, fragments of which are to be seen on High Street. Ambleside was a Roman station. "At the upper corner of Windermere lieth the dead carcass of an ancient city, with great ruins of walls, and many heaps of rubbish, one from another, remaining of building without the walls, yet to be seen. The fortress thereof was somewhat long, fenced with a ditch and rampire, took up in length 132 ells, and breadth 80. That it had been the Romans' work is evident by the British bricks, by the mortar tempered with little pieces of brick among it, by small earthen pots or pitchers, by small cruets or phials of glass, by pieces of Roman money oftentimes found, and by round stones as big as millstones or quernstones, of which laid and couched together they framed in old times their columns, and by the paved ways leading to it. Now the ancient name is gone, unless a man would guess at it, and think it were that Amboglana, whereof the book of notices maketh mention, seeing at this day it is called Ambleside."—See Camden's Britannia, 645. * As Charles Lamb retired to Enfield in 1826, these lines cannot have been composed much later than that year, although they were not published till 1842. Lamb wrote thus to Wordsworth on the 6th of April 1825: "I came home FOR EVER on Tuesday in last week. The incomprehensibleness of my condition overwhelmed me. It was like passing from life into

With patience merit the reward of peace,
 Peace ye deserve ; and may the solid good,
 Sought by a wise though late exchange, and here
 With bounteous hand beneath a cottage-roof
 To you accorded, never be withdrawn,
 Nor for the world's best promises renounced.
 Most soothing was it for a welcome Friend,
 Fresh from the crowded city, to behold
 That lonely union, privacy so deep,
 Such calm employments, such entire content.
 So when the rain is over, the storm laid,
 A pair of herons oft-times have I seen,
 Upon a rocky islet, side by side,
 Drying their feathers in the sun, at ease ;
 And so, when night with grateful gloom had fallen,
 Two glow-worms in such nearness that they shared,
 As seemed, their soft self-satisfying light,
 Each with the other, on the dewy ground,
 Where he that made them blesses their repose.—
 When wandering among lakes and hills I note,
 Once more, those creatures thus by nature paired,
 And guarded in their tranquil state of life,
 Even, as your happy presence to my mind
 Their union brought, will they repay the debt,
 And send a thankful spirit back to you,
 With hope that we, dear Friends ! shall meet again.

I can sit at home, in rain or shine, without a restless impulse for walkings. I am daily steadying, and shall soon find it as natural to me to be my own master, as it has been irksome to have had a master. Mary wakes every morning with an obscure feeling that some good has happened to us."—ED.

MISCELLANEOUS SONNETS.

DEDICATION.

Comp. 1827. — Pub. 1827.

[In the cottage, Town-end, Gramera, one afternoon in 1801, my sister read to me the Sonnets of Milton. I had long been well acquainted with them, but I was particularly struck on that occasion by the dignified simplicity and majestic harmony that runs through most of them,—in character so totally different from the Italian, and still more so from Shakespeare's fine Sonnets. I took fire, if I may be allowed to say so, and produced three Sonnets the same afternoon, the first I ever wrote except an irregular one at school. Of these three, the only one I distinctly remember is "I grieved for Buonapartè." One was never written down: the third, which was, I believe, preserved, I cannot particularise.]

 Veins it discovers exquisite and rare,

[Suggested by observation of the way in which a young friend, whom I do not choose to name, misspent his time and misapplied his talents. He took afterwards a better course, and became a useful member of society, respected, I believe, wherever he has been known.]

FAIR Prime of life! were it enough to gild
With ready sunbeams every straggling shower;
And, if an unexpected cloud should lower,
Swiftly thereon a rainbow arch to build
For Fancy's errands,—then, from fields half-tilled
Gathering green weeds to mix with poppy flower,
Thee might thy Minions crown, and chant thy power,
Unpitied by the wise, all censure stilled.
Ah! show that worthier honours are thy due:
Fair Prime of life! arouse the deeper heart;
Confirm the Spirit glorying to pursue
Some path of steep ascent and lofty aim;
And, if there be a joy that slights the claim
Of grateful memory, bid that joy depart.

* Spencer wrote ninety-two sonnets. From the eightieth sonnet it would seem that the writing of them was a relaxation, after the labour spent upon the "Faery Queen." It is to this sonnet that Wordsworth alludes.

"After so long a race as I have run
Through Faery land, which these six books compile,
Give leave to rest me, being half foredone,
And gather to myself new breath awhile."—Ed.

† Milton's twenty-three sonnets were written partly in English, partly in Italian. Compare Wordsworth's sonnet addressed to him in 1802—

"Milton, Thou shouldst be living at this hour," &c.

(Vol. II. p. 300.)—Ed.

‡ Compare the sonnet beginning—

"Nuns fret not at their convent's narrow room."

RETIREMENT.

Comp. 1827. — Pub. 1827.

If the whole weight of what we think and feel,
 Save only far as thought and feeling blend
 With action, were as nothing, patriot Friend !
 From thy remonstrance would be no appeal ;
 But to promote and fortify the weal
 Of our own Being is her paramount end ;
 A truth which they alone shall comprehend
 Who shun the mischief which they cannot heal.
 Peace in these feverish times is sovereign bliss :
 Here, with no thirst but what the stream can slake,
 And startled only by the rustling brake,
 Cool air I breathe ; while the unincumbered Mind
 By some weak aims at services assigned

THERE is a pleasure in poetic pains
Which only Poets know ;—'twas rightly said
 Whom could the Muses else allure to tread
 Their smoothest paths, to wear their lightest chains ?
 When happiest Fancy has inspired the strains,
 How oft the malice of one luckless word
 Pursues the Enthusiast to the social board,
 Haunts him belated on the silent plains !
 Yet he repines not, if his thought stand clear,
 At last, of hindrance and obscurity,
 Fresh as the star that crowns the brow of morn ;
 Bright, speckless, as a softly-moulded tear
 The moment it has left the virgin's eye,
 Or rain-drop lingering on the pointed thorn.

THE imperial Stature, the colossal stride,
Are yet before me ; yet do I behold
The broad full visage, chest of amplest mould,
The vestments 'broidered with barbaric pride :
And lo ! a poniard, at the Monarch's side,
Hangs ready to be grasped in sympathy
With the keen threatenings of that fulgent eye,
Below the white-rimmed bonnet, far-described.
Who trembles now at thy capricious mood ?
'Mid those surrounding Worthies, haughty King,
We rather think, with grateful mind sedate,
How Providence educeth, from the spring
Of lawless will, unlooked-for streams of good,
Which neither force shall check nor time abate !

The rigid features of a transient smile,
 Disperse the tear, or to the sigh give vent,
 Slackening the pains of ruthless banishment
 From his loved home, and from heroic toil.
 And trust<sup>1</sup> that spiritual Creatures round us move,
 Griefs to allay which<sup>2</sup> Reason cannot heal;
 Yea, veriest<sup>3</sup> reptiles have sufficed to prove
 To fettered wretchedness, that no Bastile*

Incident (referring to the previous sonnet); and its original form, with one line wanting, was as follows:—

When Philoctetes, in the Lemnian Isle
 Reclined with shaggy forehead earthward bent,
 Lay silent like a weed-grown Monument,
 Such Friend, for such brief moment as a smile
 Asks to be born and die in, might beguile
 The wounded Chief of pining discontent
 From home affections, and heroic toil.
 Seen, or unseen, beneath us, or above,
 Are Powers that soften anguish, if not heal;
 And toads and spiders have sufficed to prove
 To fettered wretchedness that no Bastile
 Is deep enough to exclude the light of Love,
 Though man for Brother man have ceased to feel.

Philoctetes, one of the Argonauts, received from the dying Hercules his arrows. Called by Menelaus to go with the Greeks to the Trojan war, he was sent to the island of Lemnos, owing to a wound in his foot. There he remained for ten years, till the oracle informed the Greeks that Troy could not be taken without the arrows of Hercules. The sonnet refers to the legend of his life in Lemnos.—ED.

 And might of its own beauty have been proud,
 But it was fashioned and to God was vowed
 By Virtues that diffused, in every part,
 Spirit divine through forms of human art :
 Faith had her arch—her arch, when winds blow loud,
 Into the consciousness of safety thrilled ;
 And Love her towers of dread foundation laid
 Under the grave of things ; Hope had her spire
 Star-high, and pointing still to something higher ;

* The original title (in MS.) was "To a Redbreast." In the Woods of Rydal was added in 1836.—ED.

† This Sonnet, as Poetry, explains itself, yet the scene of the incident having been a wild wood, it may be doubted, as a point of natural history, whether the bird was aware that his attentions were bestowed upon a human, or even a living creature. But a Redbreast will perch upon the foot of a gardener at work, and alight on the handle of the spade when his hand is half upon it,—this I have seen. And under my own roof I have witnessed affecting instances of the creature's friendly visits to the chambers of sick persons, as described in the verses to the Redbreast. One of these welcome intruders used frequently to roost upon a nail in the wall, from which a picture had hung, and was ready, as morning came, to pipe his song in the hearing of the invalid, who had been long confined to her room. These attachments to a particular person, when marked and continued, used to be reckoned ominous ; but the superstition is passing away.—W. W., 1827.

The poems belonging to 1828 include two short pieces, suggested during the fortnight which Wordsworth spent on the Rhine with his daughter and S. T. Coleridge in that year, The Morning Exercise, The Triad, the two on The Wishing-Gate, The Gleaner, and the ode on The Power of Sound.

A JEWISH FAMILY.

(IN A SMALL VALLEY OPPOSITE ST GOAR, UPON THE RHINE.)

Comp. 1828. — Pub. 1835.

[Coleridge, my daughter, and I, in 1828, passed a fortnight upon the banks of the Rhine, principally under the hospitable roof of Mr Aders of Gotesburg, but two days of the time we spent at St Goar in rambles among the neighbouring valleys. It was at St Goar that I saw the Jewish family here described. Though exceedingly poor, and in rags, they were not less beautiful than I have endeavoured to make them appear. We had taken a little dinner with us in a basket, and invited them to partake of it, which the mother refused to do, both for herself and children, saying it was with them a fast-day; adding, diffidently, that whether such observances were right or wrong, she felt it her duty to keep them strictly. The Jews, who are numerous on this part of the Rhine, greatly surpass the German peasantry in the beauty of their features and in the intelligence of their countenances. But the lower classes of the German peasantry have, here at least, the air of people grievously oppressed. Nursing mothers, at the age of seven or eight-and-twenty, often look haggard and far more decayed and withered than women of Cumberland and Westmoreland twice their age. This comes from being under-fed and over-worked in their vineyards in a hot and glaring sun.]

MS. Letter of Dorothy Wordsworth.

The title given to this poem by Dorothy Wordsworth, in the letter to Lady Beaumont in which the different MS. readings occur, is "A Jewish Family, met with in a Dingle near the Rhine." During the Continental Tour of 1820,—in which Wordsworth was accompanied by his wife and sister and other friends,—they went up the Rhine (see notes to the poems recording that Tour), and an extract from Mrs Wordsworth's Journal, in reference to the road from St Goar to Bingen, may illustrate this poem, written in 1828. "From St Goar to Bingen, castles commanding innumerable small fortified villages. Nothing could exceed the delightful variety, and at first the postilions whisked us too fast through these scenes ; and afterwards, the same variety so often repeated, we became quite exhausted, at least D. and I were ; and, beautiful as the road continued to be, we could scarcely keep our eyes open ; but, on my being roused from one of these slumbers, no eye wide-awake ever beheld such celestial pictures as gleamed before mine, like visions belonging to dreams. The castles seemed now almost stationary, a continued succession always in sight, rarely without two or three before us at once. There they rose from the craggy cliffs, out of the centre of the stately river, from a green island, or a craggy rock, &c., &c."

In Dorothy Wordsworth's record of the same Tour, the following occurs :—"July 24. —We looked down into one of the vales tributary to the Rhine, which, in memory of the mountain recesses of Ullawater, I named Deep-dale, a green quiet place, spotted with villages and single houses, and enlivened by a sinuous brook." . . . "A lovely dell runs behind one of these hills. At its opening, where it pours out its stream into the Rhine, we espied a one-arched Borrowdale bridge ; and, behind the bridge, a village almost buried between the abruptly rising steeps."—Ed.

INCIDENT AT BRUGÈS.

Comp. 1828. — Pub. 1835.

[This occurred at Brugès in 1828. Mrs Coleridge, my daughter, and I made a tour together in Flanders, upon the Rhine, and returned by Holland. Dora and I, while taking a walk along a retired part of the town, heard the voice as here described, and were afterwards informed it was a convent in which were many English. We were both much touched, I might say affected, and Dora moved as appears in the verses.]

In Brugès town is many a street
 Whence busy life hath fled ;<sup>1</sup>
 Where, without hurry, noiseless feet,
 The grass-grown pavement tread.
 There heard we, halting in the shade
 Flung from a Convent-tower,
 A harp that tuneful prelude made
 To a voice of thrilling power.<sup>2</sup>

The measure, simple truth to tell,
 Was fit for some gay throng ;
 Though from the same grim turret fell
 The shadow and the song.
 When silent were both voice and chords,
 The strain seemed doubly dear,
 Yet sad as sweet, for English words
 Had fallen upon the ear.<sup>1</sup>

It was a breezy hour of eve ;
 And pinnacle and spire<sup>2</sup>
 Quivered and seemed almost to heave,
 Clothed with innocuous fire ;
 But, where we stood, the setting sun
 Showed little of his state ;
 And, if the glory reached the Nun,
 'Twas through an iron grate.

Sad is thy doom, self-solaced dove,
 Captive, whoe'er thou be !<sup>1</sup>
 Oh ! what is beauty, what is love,
 And opening life to thee ?

Such feeling pressed upon my soul,
 A feeling sanctified
 By one soft trickling tear that stole
 From the Maiden at my side ;
 Less tribute could she pay than this,
 Borne gaily o'er the sea,
 Fresh from the beauty and the bliss
 Of English liberty ?

In the final arrangement of the poems, this one was published amongst the Memorials of a Tour in the Continent (1820), where it followed the two sonnets on Bruges. The poems suggested by the shorter Tour of 1828 are here published together, in their chronological place.

In an undated letter of Dorothy Wordsworth's to Lady Beaumont, before copying out this poem and the Jewish Family, she says, "The two following poems were taken from incidents recorded in Dora's journal of her tour with her father and S. T. Coleridge. As I well recollect, she has related the incidents very pleasingly, and I hope you will agree with me in thinking that the poet has made good use of them."—Ed.

A MORNING EXERCISE.

Comp. 1828. — Pub. 1832.

[Written at Rydal Mount. I could wish the last five stanzas of this to be read with the poem addressed to the skylark.]

FANCY, who leads the pastimes of the glad,
 Full oft is pleased a wayward dart to throw ;
 Sending sad shadows after things not sad,
 Peopling the harmless fields with signs of woe :

<sup>1</sup> 1832.

Sad is thy doom, imprisoned dove,
 Whoe'er thou mayest be.

MS., Dorothy Wordsworth.

Beneath her sway, a simple forest cry
Becomes an echo of man's misery.

Blithe ravens croak of death ; and when the owl
Tries his two voices for a favourite strain—
Tu-whit—tu-who! the unsuspecting fowl
Forebodes mishap or seems but to complain ;
Fancy, intent to harass and annoy,
Can thus pervert the evidence of joy.

Through border wilds where naked Indians stray,
Myriads of notes attest her subtle skill ;
A feathered task-master cries, "WORK AWAY!"
And, in thy iteration, "WHIP POOR WILL!"*
Is heard the spirit of a toil-worn slave,
Lashed out of life, not quiet in the grave.

What wonder ? at her bidding, ancient lays
Steeped in dire grief the voice of Philomel ;
And that fleet messenger of summer days,
The Swallow, twittered subject to like spell ;
But ne'er could Fancy bend the buoyant Lark
To melancholy service—hark ! O hark !

The daisy sleeps upon the dewy lawn,
Not lifting yet the head that evening bowed ;
But He is risen, a later star of dawn,
Glittering and twinkling near yon rosy cloud ;

Where earth resembles most his own domain !<sup>1</sup>
 Urania's self * might welcome with pleased ear
 These matins mounting towards her native sphere.

Chanter by heaven attracted, whom no bars
 To daylight known deter from that pursuit,
 'Tis well that some sage instinct, when the stars
 Come forth at evening, keeps Thee still and mute ;
 For not an eyelid could to sleep incline
 Wert thou among them, singing as they shine !

THE TRIAD.

Comp. 1828. — Pub. 1829.

[Written at Rydal Mount. The girls, Edith Southey, my daughter
 Dora, and Sara Coleridge.]

SHOW me the noblest Youth of present time,
 Whose trembling fancy would to love give birth ;
 Some God or Hero, from the Olympian clime
 Returned, to seek a Consort upon earth ;
 Or, in no doubtful prospect, let me see
 The brightest star of ages yet to be,
 And I will mate and match him blissfully.

I will not fetch a Naiad from a flood
 Pure as herself—(song lacks not mightier power)
 Nor leaf-crowned Dryad from a pathless wood,
 Nor Sea-nymph glistening from her coral bower ;
 Mere Mortals, bodied forth in vision still,

Nor shall the tongue of envious pride
Presume those interweavings to reprove
In you, which that fair progeny of Jove, ‡

—I sing <sup>2</sup> in vain ;—the pines have hushed their waving :
A peerless Youth expectant at my side,
Breathless as they, with unabated craving
Looks to the earth, and to the vacant air ;
And, with a wandering eye that seems to chide,
Asks of the clouds what occupants they hide :—
But why solicit more than sight could bear,
By casting on a moment all we dare ?
Invoke we those bright Beings one by one ;
And what was boldly promised, truly shall be done.

Of a closed volume lingering in thy hand
 Has raised thy spirit to a peaceful stand
 Among the glories of a happier age."
 Her brow hath opened on me—see it there,
 Brightening the umbrage of her hair ;
 So gleams the crescent moon, that loves

 Tenderest bloom is on her cheek ;
 Wish not for a richer streak ;
 Nor dread the depth of meditative eye ;
 But let thy love, upon that azure field
 Of thoughtfulness and beauty, yield
 Its homage offered up in purity.
 What would'st thou more ? In sunny glade,
 Or under leaves of thickest shade,
 Was such a stillness e'er diffused
 Since earth grew calm while angels mused ?
 Softly she treads, as if her foot were loth

THE WISHING-GATE.

Comp. 1828. — Pub. 1829.

[Written at Rydal Mount. See also "Wishing-gate destroyed."]

In the vale of Graamere, by the side of the old high-way leading to Ambleside, is a gate, which, time out of mind, has been called the Wishing-gate, from a belief that wishes formed or indulged there have a favourable issue.*

HOPE rules a land for ever green :
 All powers that serve the bright-eyed Queen
 Are confident and gay ;
 Clouds at her bidding disappear
 Points she to aught ?—the bliss draws near,
 And Fancy smooths the way.

Not such the land of Wishes—there
 Dwell fruitless day-dreams, lawless prayer,
 And thoughts with things at strife ;
 Yet how forlorn, should ye depart,
 Ye superstitions of the heart,
 How poor, were human life !

When magic lore abjured its might,
 Ye did not forfeit one dear right,
 One tender claim abate ;

---

* Having been told, upon what I thought good authority, that this gate had been destroyed, and the opening where it hung, walled up, I gave vent immediately to my feelings in these stanzae. But going to the place some time after, I found with much delight, my old favourite unmolested.—W. W., 1832.

Witness this symbol of your sway,
 Surviving near the public way,
 The rustic Wishing-gate !

Inquire not if the faery race
 Shed kindly influence on the place,
 Ere northward they retired ;
 If here a warrior left a spell,
 Panting for glory as he fell ;
 Or here a saint expired.

Enough that all around is fair,
 Composed with Nature's finest care,
 And in her fondest love—
 Peace to embosom and content—
 To overawe the turbulent,
 The selfish to reprove.

Yea !<sup>1</sup> even the Stranger from afar,
 Reclining on this moss-grown bar,
 Unknowing, and unknown,
 The infection of the ground partakes,
 Longing for his Beloved—who makes
 All happiness her own.

Then why should conscious Spirits fear
 The mystic stirrings that are here,
 The ancient faith disclaim ?
 The local Genius ne'er befriends
 Desires whose course in folly ends,
 Whose just reward is shame.

Smile if thou wilt, but not in scorn,
 If some, by ceaseless pains outworn,
 Here crave an easier lot ;

<sup>1</sup> 1832.

Yes ! even . . . . .

1829.

If some have thirsted to renew
 A broken vow, or bind a true,
 With firmer, holier knot.

And not in vain, when thoughts are cast
 Upon the irrevocable past,
 Some Penitent sincere
 May for a worthier future sigh,
 While trickles from his downcast eye
 No unavailing tear.

The Worldling, pining to be freed
 From turmoil, who would turn or speed
 The current of his fate,
 Might stop before this favoured scene,
 At Nature's call, nor blush to lean
 Upon the Wishing-gate.

The Sage, who feels how blind, how weak
 Is man, though loth such help to seek,
 Yet, passing, here might pause,
 And thirst<sup>1</sup> for insight to allay
 Misgiving, while the crimson day
 In quietness withdraws ;

Or when the church-clock's knell profound *
 To Time's first step across the bound
 Of midnight makes reply ;
 Time pressing on with starry crest,
 To filial sleep upon the breast
 Of dread eternity.

THE WISHING-GATE DESTROYED.

Comp. 1828. — Pub. 1842.

'Tis gone—with old belief and dream
 That round it clung, and tempting scheme
     Released from fear and doubt ;
 And the bright landscape too must lie,
 By this blank wall, from every eye,
     Relentlessly shut out.

Bear witness ye who seldom passed
 That opening—but a look ye cast
     Upon the lake below,
 What spirit-stirring power it gained
 From faith which here was entertained,
     Though reason might say no.

Blest is that ground, where, o'er the springs
 Of history, Glory claps her wings,
     Fame sheds the exulting tear ;
 Yet earth is wide, and many a nook
 Unheard of is, like this, a book
     For modest meanings dear.

It was in sooth a happy thought
 That grafted, on so fair a spot,
     So confident a token
 Of coming good ;—the charm is fled ;
 Indulgent centuries spun a thread,
     Which one harsh day has broken.

Alas ! for him who gave the word ;
 Could he no sympathy afford,
     Derived from earth or heaven,

To hearts so oft by hope betrayed ;
Their very wishes wanted aid
Which here was freely given ?

Where, for the love-lorn maiden's wound,
Will now so readily be found
A balm of expectation ?
Anxious for far-off children, where
Shall mothers breathe a like sweet air
Of home-felt consolation ?

And not unfelt will prove the loss
'Mid trivial care and petty cross
And each day's shallow grief :
Though the most easily beguiled
Were oft among the first that smiled
At their own fond belief.

If still the reckless change we mourn,
A reconciling thought may turn
To harm that might lurk here,
Ere judgment prompted from within
Fit aims, with courage to begin,
And strength to persevere.

Not Fortune's slave is Man : our state
Enjoins, while firm resolves await
On wishes just and wise,
That strenuous action follow both,
And life be one perpetual growth
Of heaven-ward enterprise.

So taught, so trained, we boldly face
All accidents of time and place ;
Whatever props may fail,

Trust in that sovereign law can spread
 New glory o'er the mountain's head,
 Fresh beauty through the vale.

That truth informing mind and heart,
 The simplest cottager may part,
 Ungrieved, with charm and spell ;
 And yet, lost Wishing-gate, to thee
 The voice of grateful memory
 Shall bid a kind farewell !

A Gate—though not the “moss-grown bar” of 1828—still stands at the old place, where Wordsworth tells us one had stood “time out of mind ;” so that the “blank wall” does not shut out the “bright landscape” at the old and now classic spot. Long may it stand, defying wind and weather !—Ed.

THAT happy gleam of vernal eyes,
 Those locks from summer's golden skies,
 That o'er thy brow are shed ;
 That cheek—a kindling of the morn,
 That lip—a rose-bud from the thorn,
 I saw ; and Fancy sped
 To scenes Arcadian, whispering, through soft air,
 Of bliss that grows without a care,
 And<sup>1</sup> happiness that never flies—

Whispering of promise,<sup>1</sup> where no blight
 Can reach the innocent delight ;
 Where pity, to the mind conveyed
 In pleasure, is the darkest shade
 That Time, unwrinkled grandsire, flings
 From his smoothly gliding wings.

What mortal form, what earthly face
 Inspired the pencil, lines to trace,
 And mingle colours, that should breed
 Such rapture, nor want power to feed ;
 For had thy charge been idle flowers,
 Fair Damsel ! o'er my captive mind,
 To truth and sober reason blind,
 'Mid that soft air, those long-lost bowers,
 The sweet illusion might have hung, for hours.

Thanks to this tell-tale sheaf of corn,
 That touchingly bespeaks thee born
 Life's daily tasks with them to share
 Who, whether from their lowly bed
 They rise, or rest the weary head,

 From Heaven, and feel what they repeat,
 While they give utterance to the prayer
 That asks for daily bread.

ON THE POWER OF SOUND.

Comp. December 1828. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount. I have often regretted that my tour in Ireland, chiefly performed in the short days of October in a carriage-and-four (I was with Mr Marshall), supplied my memory with so few images that were new, and with so little motive to write. The lines however in this poem, "Thou too be heard, lone eagle!" were suggested near the Giants' Causeway, or rather at the promontory of Fairhead, where a pair of eagles wheeled above our heads and darted off as if to hide themselves in a blaze of sky made by the setting sun.]

ARGUMENT.

The Ear addressed, as occupied by a spiritual functionary, in communion with sounds, individual, or combined in studied harmony.—Sources and effects of those sounds (to the close of 6th Stanza).—The power of music, whence proceeding, exemplified in the idiot.—Origin of music, and its effect in early ages—how produced (to the middle of 10th Stanza).—The mind recalled to sounds acting casually and severally.—Wish uttered (11th Stanza) that these could be united into a scheme or system for moral interests and intellectual contemplation.—(Stanza 12th). The Pythagorean theory of numbers and music, with their supposed power over the motions of the universe—imagination consonant with such a theory.—Wish expressed (in 13th Stanza) realized in some degree, by the representation of all sounds under the form of thanksgiving to the Creator.—(Last Stanza) the destruction of earth and the planetary system—the survival of audible harmony, and its support in the Divine Nature, as revealed in Holy Writ.

I.

THY functions are ethereal,
 As if within thee dwelt a glancing mind,
 Organ of vision ! And a Spirit aërial
 Informs the cell of Hearing, dark and blind ;
 Intricate labyrinth, more dread for thought
 To enter than oracular cave ;
 Strict passage, through which sighs are brought,
 And whispers for the heart, their slave ;
 And shrieks, that revel in abuse
 Of shivering flesh ; and warbled air,
 Whose piercing sweetness can unloose

The chains of frenzy, or entice a smile
 Into the ambush of despair ;
 Hosannas pealing down the long-drawn aisle,
 And requiems answered by the pulse that beats
 Devoutly, in life's last retreats !

II.

The headlong streams and fountains
 Serve Thee, invisible Spirit, with untired powers :
 Cheering the wakeful tent on Syrian mountains,
 They lull perchance ten thousand thousand flowers.
That roar, the prowling lion's Here I am,
 How fearful to the desert wide !
 That bleat, how tender ! of the dam
 Calling a straggler to her side.
 Shout, cuckoo !—let the vernal soul
 Go with thee to the frozen zone ;
 Toll from thy loftiest perch, lone bell-bird, toll !
 At the still hour to Mercy dear,
 Mercy from her twilight throne
 Listening to nun's faint throb of holy fear,
 To sailor's prayer breathed from a darkening sea,
 Or widow's cottage-lullaby.

III.

Ye Voices, and ye Shadows
 And Images of voice—to hound and horn
 From rocky steep and rock-bestudded meadows
 Flung back, and, in the sky's blue caves, reborn—
 On with your pastime ! till the church-tower bells
 A greeting give of measured glee ;
 And milder echoes from their cells
 Repeat the bridal symphony.
 Then, or far earlier, let us rove
 Where mists are breaking up or gone,

And from aloft look down into a cove
 Besprinkled with a careless quire,
 Happy milk-maids, one by one
 Scattering a ditty each to her desire,
 A liquid concert matchless by nice Art,
 A stream as if from one full heart.

IV.

Blest be the song that brightens
 The blind man's gloom, exalts the veteran's mirth;
 Unscorned the peasant's whistling breath, that lightens
 His duteous toil of furrowing the green earth.
 For the tired slave, Song lifts the languid oar,
 And bids it aptly fall, with chime
 That beautifies the fairest shore,
 And mitigates the harshest clime.
 Yon pilgrims see—in lagging file
 They move; but soon the appointed way
 A choral Ave Marie shall beguile,
 And to their hope the distant shrine
 Glisten with a livelier ray:
 Nor friendless he, the prisoner of the mine,
 Who from the well-spring of his own clear breast
 Can draw, and sing his griefs to rest.

V.

When civic renovation
 Dawns on a kingdom, and for needful haste
 Best eloquence avails not, Inspiration
 Mounts with a tune, that travels like a blast
 Piping through cave and battlemented tower;
 Then starts the sluggard, pleased to meet
 That voice of Freedom, in its power
 Of promises, shrill, wild, and sweet!
 Who, from a martial pageant, spreads

Incitements of a battle-day,
 Thrilling the unweapond crowd with plumeless heads?—
 Even She whose Lydian airs inspire*
 Peaceful striving, gentle play
 Of timid hope and innocent desire
 Shot from the dancing Graces, as they move
 Fanned by the plausive wings of Love.

VI.

How oft along thy mazes,
 Regent of sound, have dangerous Passions trod!
 O Thou, through whom the temple rings with praises,
 And blackening clouds in thunder speak of God,
 Betray not by the cozenage of sense †
 Thy votaries, wooingly resigned
 To a voluptuous influence
 That taints the purer, better, mind;
 But lead sick Fancy to a harp

 And, if the virtuous feel a pang too sharp,
 Soothe it into patience,—stay
 The uplifted arm of Suicide;
 And let some mood of thine in firm array
 Knit every thought the impending issue needs,
 Ere martyr burns, or patriot bleeds!

 A proud One docile as a managed horse :
 And singing, while the accordant hand
 Sweeps his harp, the Master rides :

 And he, with his preserver, shine star-bright
 In memory, through silent night.

* The fundamental idea, both in the intellectual and moral philosophy of the Pythagoreans, was that of harmony or proportion. Their natural science or cosmology was dominated by the same idea, that as the world and all spheres within the universe were constructed symmetrically, and moved around a central focus, the forms and the proportions of things were best expressed by number. All good was due to the principle of order; all evil to disorder. In accordance with the mathematical conception of the universe which ruled the Pythagoreans, justice was equality (ισότης), that is to say it consisted in each one receiving equally according to his deserts. Friendship too was equality of feeling and relationship; harmony being the radical idea, alike in the ethics and in the cosmology of the school.—Ed.

† Compare Keats to his friend Bailey in 1817: "The great elements we know of are no mean comforters; the open sky sits upon our senses like a sapphire crown; the air is our robe of state; the earth is our throne; and the sea a mighty minstrel playing before it."—Ed.

GOLD AND SILVER FISHES IN A VASE.

Comp. 1829. — Pub. 1835.

[They were a present from Miss Jewsbury, of whom mention is made in the note at the end of the next poem. The fish were healthy to all appearance in their confinement for a long time, but at last, for some cause we could not make out, they languished, and, one of them being all but dead, they were taken to the pool under the old Pollard-oak. The apparently dying one lay on its side unable to move. I used to watch it, and about the tenth day it began to right itself, and in a few days more was able to swim about with its companions. For many months they continued to prosper in their new place of abode ; but one night by an unusually great flood they were swept out of the pool, and perished to our great regret.]

THE soaring lark is blest as proud
 When at heaven's gate she sings ;
 The roving bee proclaims aloud
 Her flight by vocal wings ;
 While Ye, in lasting durance pent,
 Your silent lives employ
 For something more than dull content,
 Though haply less than joy.

Yet might your glassy prison seem
 A place where joy is known,
 Where golden flash and silver gleam
 Have meanings of their own ;
 While, high and low, and all about,
 Your motions, glittering Elves !
 Ye weave—no danger from without,
 And peace among yourselves.

Type of a sunny human breast
 Is your transparent cell ;
 Where Fear is but a transient guest,
 No sullen Humours dwell ;
 Where, sensitive of every ray
 That smites this tiny sea,
 Your scaly panoplies repay
 The loan with usury.

How beautiful !—Yet none knows why
 This ever-graceful change,
 Renewed—renewed incessantly—
 Within your quiet range.
 Is it that ye with conscious skill
 For mutual pleasure glide ;
 And sometimes, not without your will,
 Are dwarfed, or magnified ?

Fays, Genii of gigantic size !
 And now, in twilight dim,
 Clustering like constellated eyes
 In wings of Cherubim,
 When the fierce orbs abate their glare ;—<sup>1</sup>
 Whate'er your forms express,
 Whate'er ye seem, whate'er ye are—
 All leads to gentleness.

Cold though your nature be, 'tis pure ;
 Your birthright is a fence
 From all that haughtier kinds endure
 Through tyranny of sense.

<sup>1</sup> 1837.

When they abate their fiery glare :

1835.

Ah ! not alone by colours bright
 Are Ye to Heaven allied,
 When, like essential Forms of light,
 Ye mingle, or divide.

For day-dreams soft as e'er beguiled
 Day-thoughts while limbs repose ;
 For moonlight fascinations mild,
 Your gift, ere shutters close—
 Accept, mute Captives ! thanks and praise ;
 And may this tribute prove
 That gentle admirations raise
 Delight resembling love.

* This "elfin pool," to which the gold and silver fishes were removed, still exists beneath the Pollard Oak, in "Dora's Field," at Rydal Mount.—Ed.

Swells like the bosom of a man set free ;
 A wilderness is rich with liberty.
 Roll on, ye spouting whales, who die or keep
 Your independence in the fathomless Deep !
 Spread, tiny nautilus, the living sail ;
 Dive, at thy choice, or brave the freshening gale !
 If unproved the ambitious eagle mount
 Sunward to seek the daylight in its fount,
 Bays, gulfs, and ocean's Indian width, shall be,
 Till the world perishes, a field for thee !*

While musing here I sit in shadow cool,
 And watch these mute Companions, in the pool,
 (Among reflected boughs of leafy trees)
 By glimpses caught—disporting at their ease.
 Enlivened, braced, by hardy luxuries,
 I ask what warrant fixed them (like a spell
 Of witchcraft fixed them) in the crystal cell ;
 To wheel with languid motion round and round,
 Beautiful, yet in mournful durance bound.
 Their peace, perhaps, our lightest footfall marred ;
 On their quick sense our sweetest music jarred ;
 And whither could they dart, if seized with fear ?
 No sheltering stone, no tangled root was near.
 When fire or taper ceased to cheer the room,
 They wore away the night in starless gloom ;
 And, when the sun first dawned upon the streams,
 How faint their portion of his vital beams !
 Thus, and unable to complain, they fared,
 While not one joy of ours by them was shared.

Is there a cherished bird (I venture now
 To snatch a sprig from Chaucer's reverend brow)—

 Though sure of plaudits on his costly stage,
 Though fed with dainties from the snow-white hand
 Of a kind mistress, fairest of the land,
 But gladly would escape ; and, if need were,
 Scatter the colours from the plumes that bear
 The emancipated captive through blithe air
 Into strange woods, where he at large may live
 On best or worst which they and Nature give ?
 The beetle loves his unpretending track,
 The snail the house he carries on his back ;
 The far-fetched worm with pleasure would disown
 The bed we give him, though of softest down ;
 A noble instinct ; in all kinds the same,
 All ranks ! What Sovereign, worthy of the name,
 If doomed to breathe against his lawful will
 An element that flatters him—to kill,
 But would rejoice to barter outward show
 For the least boon that freedom can bestow ?

But most the Bard is true to inborn right,
 Lark of the dawn, and Philomel of night,
 Exults in freedom, can with rapture vouch
 For the dear blessings of a lowly couch,
 A natural meal—days, months, from Nature's hand ;
 Time, place, and business, all at his command !—
 Who bends to happier duties, who more wise
 Than the industrious Poet, taught to prize,
 Above all grandeur, a pure life uncrossed

* "The Sabine farm was situated in the valley of Ustica, thirty miles from Rome and twelve miles from Tivoli. It possessed the attraction, no small one to Horace, of being very secluded: yet, at the same time, within an easy distance of Rome. When his spirits wanted the stimulus of society or the bustle of the capital, which they often did, his ambling mule would speedily convey him thither; and when jaded, on the other hand, by the noise and racket and dissipations of Rome, he could, in the same homely way, bury himself in a few hours among the hills, and there, under the shadow of his favourite Lucretia, or by the banks of the clear-flowing and ice-cold Digentia, either stretch himself to dream upon the grass, lulled by the murmurs of the stream, or do a little farming in the way of clearing his fields of stones, or turning over a furrow here and there with the hoe."—(See Sir Theodore Martin's Horace, p. 68.)—Ed.

Depressed the melancholy Cowley, laid
 Under a fancied yew-tree's luckless shade ;
 A doleful bower for penitential song,
 Where Man and Muse complained of mutual wrong ;
 While Cam's ideal current glided by,
 And antique towers nodded their foreheads high,
 Citadels dear to studious privacy.
 But Fortune, who had long been used to sport
 With this tried Servant of a thankless Court,
 Relenting met his wishes ; and to you

HUMANITY.

Comp. 1829. — Pub. 1835.

[These verses and those entitled "Liberty" were composed as one piece which Mrs Wordsworth complained of as unwieldy and ill-proportioned ; and accordingly it was divided into two on her judicious recommendation.]

Not from his fellows only man may learn
 Rights to compare and duties to discern :
 All creatures and all objects, in degree,
 Are friends and patrons of humanity.—MS. 1835.

The Rocking-stones, alluded to in the beginning of the following verses, are supposed to have been used, by our British ancestors, both for judicial and religious purposes. Such stones are not uncommonly found, at this day, both in Great Britain and in Ireland.

* There is now, alas ! no possibility of the anticipation, with which the above Epistle concludes, being realised ; nor were the verses ever seen by the Individual for whom they were intended. She accompanied her husband, the Rev. Wm. Fletcher, to India, and died of cholera, at the age of thirty-two or thirty-three years, on her way from Shalapore to Bombay, deeply lamented by all who knew her.

Her enthusiasm was ardent, her piety steadfast ; and her great talents would have enabled her to be eminently useful in the difficult path of life to which she had been called. The opinion she entertained of her own performances, given to the world under her maiden name, Jewsbury, was modest and humble, and, indeed, far below their merits ; as is often the case with those who are making trial of their powers, with a hope to discover what they are best fitted for. In one quality, viz., quickness in the motions of her mind, she had, within the range of the Author's acquaintance, no equal.—W. W., 1835.

 And functions dwell in beast and bird that sway
 The reasoning mind, or with the fancy play,
 Inviting, at all seasons, ears and eyes
 To watch for undelusive auguries :—<sup>1</sup>
 Not uninspired appear their simplest ways ;
 Their voices mount symbolical of praise—
 To mix with hymns that Spirits make and hear ;
 And to fallen man their innocence is dear.
 Enraptured Art draws from those sacred springs
 Streams that reflect the poetry of things !
 Where christian Martyrs stand in hues portrayed,
 That, might a wish avail, would never fade,

 Shed round the altar a celestial calm ;
 There, too, behold the lamb and guileless dove
 Prest in the tenderness of virgin love
 To saintly bosoms !—Glorious is the blending
 Of right affections climbing or descending

 Alternate ; carrying holy thoughts and prayers

 Thought-tempered wrongs, for each humane respect
 Oft worse to bear, or deadlier in effect.
 Witness those glances of indignant scorn
 From some high-minded Slave, impelled to spurn
 The kindness that would make him less forlorn ;
 Or, if the soul to bondage be subdued,
 His look of pitiable gratitude !

Alas for thee, bright Galaxy of Isles,
 Whose<sup>1</sup> day departs in pomp, returns with smiles—
 To greet the flowers and fruitage of a land,
 As the sun mounts, by sea-born breezes fanned ;
 A land whose azure mountain-tops are seats
 For Gods in council, whose green vales, retreats
 Fit for the shades of heroes, mingling there
 To breath Elysian peace in upper air.

Though cold as winter, gloomy as the grave,
 Stone walls a prisoner make, but not a slave.*

Shame that our laws at distance still protect <sup>1</sup>
 Enormities, which they at home reject !

 Of Nations,' * sacrifice a People's health,
 Body and mind and soul ; a thirst so keen
 Is ever urging on the vast machine
 Of sleepless Labour, 'mid whose dizzy wheels
 The Power least prized is that which thinks and feels.

Then, for the pastimes of this delicate age,
 And all the heavy or light vassalage
 Which for their sakes we fasten, as may suit
 Our varying moods, on human kind or brute,
 'Twere well in little, as in great, to pause,
 Lest Fancy trifle with eternal laws.
 Not from his fellows only man may learn
 Rights to compare and duties to discern !
 All creatures and all objects, in degree,
 Are friends and patrons of humanity.

[This Lawn is the sloping one approaching the kitchen-garden, and was made out of it. Hundreds of times have I watched the dancing of shadows amid a press of sunshine, and other beautiful appearances of light and shade, flowers and shrubs. What a contrast between this and the cabbages and onions and carrots that used to grow there on a piece of ugly-shaped unsightly ground ! No reflection, however, either upon cabbages or onions ; the latter we know were worshipped by the Egyptians, and he must have a poor eye for beauty who has not observed how much of it there is in the form and colour which cabbages and plants of that genus exhibit through the various stages of their growth and decay. A richer display of colour in vegetable nature can scarcely be conceived than Coleridge, my sister, and I saw in a bed of potato-plants in blossom near a hut upon the moor between Inversneyd and Loch Katrine.* These blossoms were of such extraordinary beauty and richness that no one could have passed them without notice. But the sense must be cultivated through the mind

* In 1803, Miss Wordsworth thus records it :—“We passed by one patch of potatoes that a florist might have been proud of ; no carnation-bed ever looked more gay than this square plot of ground on the waste common. The flowers were in very large bunches, and of an extraordinary size, and of every conceivable shade of colouring from snow-white to deep purple. It was pleasing in that place, where perhaps was never yet a flower cultivated by man for his own pleasure, to see these blossoms grow more gladly than elsewhere, making a summer garden near the mountain dwellings.”—(Recollections of a Tour made in Scotland in 1803, p. 84).—Ed.

before we can perceive these inexhaustible treasures of Nature, for such they really are, without the least necessary reference to the utility of her productions, or even to the land, whereupon, as we learn by research, they are dependent. Some are of opinion that the habit of analysing, decomposing, and anatomising, is inevitably unfavourable to the perception of beauty. People are led into this mistake by overlooking the fact that such processes being to a certain extent within the reach of a limited intellect, we are apt to ascribe to them that insensibility of which they are in truth the effect and not the cause. Admiration and love, to which all knowledge truly vital must tend, are felt by men of real genius in proportion as their discoveries in natural Philosophy are enlarged; and the beauty in form of a plant or an animal is not made less but more apparent as a whole by more accurate insight into its constituent properties and powers. A Savant who is not also a poet in soul and a religionist in heart is a feeble and unhappy creature.]

THIS Lawn, a carpet all alive
 With shadows flung from leaves—to strive
     In dance, amid a press
 Of sunshine, an apt emblem yields
 Of Worldlings revelling in the fields
     Of strenuous idleness;

Less quick the stir when tide and breeze
 Encounter, and to narrow seas
     Forbid a moment's rest;
 The medley less when boreal Lights
 Glance to and fro, like aery Sprites
     To feats of arms address!

Yet, spite of all this eager strife,
 This ceaseless play, the genuine life
     That serves the stedfast hours
 Is in the grass beneath, that grows
 Unheeded, and the mute repose
     Of sweetly-breathing flowers.

THOUGHT ON THE SEASONS.

Comp. 1829. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount.]

FLATTERED with promise of escape
 From every hurtful blast,
 Spring takes, O sprightly May! thy shape;
 Her loveliest and her last.*

Less fair is summer riding high
 In fierce solstitial power,
 Less fair than when a lenient sky
 Brings on her parting hour.

When earth repays with golden sheaves
 The labours of the plough,
 And ripening fruits and forest leaves
 All brighten on the bough;

What pensive beauty autumn shows,
 Before she hears the sound
 Of winter rushing in, to close
 The emblematic round!

Such be our Spring, our Summer such;
 So may our Autumn blend
 With hoary Winter, and Life touch,
 Through heaven-born hope, her end!

Comp. 1829.* — Pub. 1832.

["Miserrimus." Many conjectures have been formed as to the person who lies under this stone. Nothing appears to be known for a certainty. Query—The Rev. Mr Morris, a non-conformist, a sufferer for conscience-sake; a worthy man who, having been deprived of his benefice after the accession of William III., lived to an old age in extreme destitution, on the alms of charitable Jacobites.]

"MISERRIMUS!" and neither name nor date,
Prayer, text, or symbol, graven upon the stone; †
Nought but that word assigned to the unknown,
That solitary word—to separate
From all, and cast a cloud around the fate
Of him who lies beneath. Most wretched one,
Who chose his epitaph?—Himself alone
Could thus have dared the grave to agitate,
And claim, among the dead, this awful crown;
Nor doubt that He marked also for his own
Close to these cloistral steps a burial-place,
That every foot might fall with heavier tread,
Trampling upon his vileness. Stranger, pass
Softly!—To save the contrite, Jesus bled.

* This, and the following sonnet on the tradition of Oker Hill, were first published in The Keepsake in 1829.—ED.

† This stone is in the cloisters of Worcester Cathedral, at the north-west corner of the quadrangle, just below the doorway leading into the nave of the cathedral. It is a small stone, two feet, by one and a half. A TRADITION OF OKER HILL IN DARLEY DALE,
DERBYSHIRE.<sup>1</sup>

Comp. 1829. — Pub. 1832.

[This pleasing tradition was told me by the coachman at whose side I sate while he drove down the dale, he pointing to the trees on the hill as he related the story.]

'Tis said that to the brow of yon fair hill
 Two Brothers clomb, and, turning face from face,
 Nor one look more exchanging, grief to still
 Or feed, each planted on that lofty place
 A chosen Tree; * then, eager to fulfil
 Their courses, like two new-born rivers, they
 In opposite directions urged their way
 Down from the far-seen mount. No blast might kill
 Or blight that fond memorial;—the trees grew,
 And now entwine their arms; but ne'er again
 Embraced those Brothers upon Earth's wide plain;
 Nor aught of mutual joy or sorrow knew
 Until their spirits mingled in the sea
 That to itself takes all, Eternity.

THE ARMENIAN LADY'S LOVE.

Comp. 1830. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount.]

The subject of the following poem is from the Orlandus of the author's friend, Kenelm Henry Digby: and the liberty is taken of inscribing it to him as an acknowledgment, however unworthy, of pleasure and instruction derived from his numerous and valuable writings, illustrative of the piety and chivalry of the olden time.

I.

You have heard 'a Spanish Lady
 How she wooed an English man; '*
 Hear now of a fair Armenian,
 Daughter of the proud Soldàn;
 How she loved a Christian Slave, and told her pain
 By word, look, deed, with hope that he might love again.

II.

"Pluck that rose, it moves my liking,"
 Said she, lifting up her veil;
 "Pluck it for me, gentle gardener,
 Ere it wither and grow pale."
 "Princess fair, I till the ground, but may not take
 From twig or bed an humbler flower, even for your sake!"

---

* See, in Percy's Reliques, that fine old ballad, "The Spanish Lady's Love;" from which Poem the form of stanza, as suitable to dialogue, is adopted.—W. W., 1835.

III.

"Grieved am I, submissive Christian !
To behold thy captive state ;
Women, in your land, may pity
(May they not ?) the unfortunate."
"Yes, kind Lady ! otherwise man could not bear
Life, which to every one that breathes is full of care."

IV.

"Worse than idle is compassion
If it end in tears and sighs ;
Thee from bondage would I rescue
And from vile indignities ;
Nurtured, as thy mien bespeaks, in high degree,
Look up—and help a hand that longs to set thee free."

V.

"Lady ! dread the wish, nor venture
In such peril to engage ;
Think how it would stir against you
Your most loving father's rage :
Sad deliverance would it be, and yoked with shame,
Should troubles overflow on her from whom it came."

VI.

"Generous Frank ! the just in effort
Are of inward peace secure :
Hardships for the brave encountered,
Even the feeblest may endure :
If almighty grace through me thy chains unbind
My father for slave's work may seek a slave in mind."

VII.

“ Princess, at this burst of goodness,
 My long-frozen heart grows warm !”
 “ Yet you make all courage fruitless,
 Me to save from chance of harm :
 Leading such companion, I that gilded dome,
 Yon minarets, would gladly leave for his worst home.”

VIII.

“ Feeling tunes your voice, fair Princess !
 And your brow is free from scorn,
 Else these words would come like mockery,
 Sharper than the pointed thorn.”
 “ Whence the undeserved mistrust ? Too wide apart
 Our faith hath been,—O would that eyes could see the heart !”

IX.

“ Tempt me not, I pray ; my doom is
 These base implements to wield ;
 Rusty lance, I ne'er shall grasp thee,
 Ne'er assoil my cobwebb'd shield !
 Never see my native land, nor castle towers,
 Nor Her who thinking of me there counts widowed hours.”

X.

“ Prisoner ! pardon youthful fancies ;
 Wedded ? If you can, say no !
 Blessed is and be your consort ;
 Hopes I cherished—let them go !
 Handmaid's privilege would leave my purpose free,
 Without another link to my felicity.”

XL

“Wedded love with loyal Christians,
 Lady, is a mystery rare ;
 Body, heart, and soul in union,
 Make one being of a pair.”
 “Humble love in me would look for no return,
 Soft as a guiding star that cheers, but cannot burn.”

XII.

“Gracious Allah ! by such title
 Do I dare to thank the God,
 Him who thus exalts thy spirit,
 Flower of an unchristian sod !
 Or hast thou put off wings which thou in heaven dost wear ?
 What have I seen, and heard, or dreamt ? where am I ?
 where ?”

XIII.

Here broke off the dangerous converse :
 Less impassioned words might tell
 How the pair escaped together,
 Tears not wanting, nor a knell
 Of sorrow in her heart while through her father's door,
 And from her narrow world, she passed for evermore.

XIV.

But affections higher, holier,
 Urged her steps ; she shrunk from trust
 In a sensual creed that trampled
 Woman's birthright into dust.
 Little be the wonder then, the blame be none,
 If she, a timid Maid, hath put such boldness on.

XV.

Judge both Fugitives with knowledge :
In those old romantic days
Mighty were the soul's commandments
To support, restrain, or raise.
Foes might hang upon their path, snakes rustle near,
But nothing from their inward selves had they to fear.

XVI.

Thought infirm ne'er came between them
Whether printing desert sands
With accordant steps, or gathering
Forest-fruit with social hands ;
Or whispering like two reeds that in the cold moonbeam
Bend with the breeze their heads, beside a crystal stream.

XVII.

On a friendly deck reposing
They at length for Venice steer ;
There, when they had closed their voyage,
One, who daily on the pier
Watched for tidings from the East, beheld his Lord,
Fell down and clasped his knees for joy, not uttering word.

XVIII.

Mutual was the sudden transport ;
Breathless questions followed fast,
Years contracting to a moment,
Each word greedier than the last ;
“ Hie thee to the Countess, friend ! return with speed,
And of this Stranger speak by whom her lord was freed.

XIX.

Say that I, who might have languished,
 Drooped and pined till life was spent,
 Now before the gates of Stolberg *
 My Deliverer would present
 For a crowning recompense, the precious grace
 Of her who in my heart still holds her ancient place.

XX.

Make it known that my Companion
 Is of royal eastern blood,
 Thirsting after all perfection,
 Innocent, and meek, and good,
 Though with misbelievers bred ; but that dark night
 Will holy Church disperse by beams of gospel-light."

XXI.

Swiftly went that grey-haired Servant,
 Soon returned a trusty Page
 Charged with greetings, benedictions,
 Thanks and praises, each a gage
 For a sunny thought to cheer the Stranger's way,
 Her virtuous scruples to remove, her fears allay.

XXII.

And how blest the Reunited,
 While beneath their castle-walls,
 Runs a deafening noise of welcome !—
 Blest, though every tear that falls

XXIII.

Through a haze of human nature,
Glorified by heavenly light,
Looked the beautiful Deliverer
On that overpowering sight,
While across her virgin cheek pure blushes strayed,
For every tender sacrifice her heart had made.

XXIV.

On the ground the weeping Countess
Knelt, and kissed the Stranger's hand ;
Act of soul-devoted homage,
Pledge of an eternal band :
Nor did aught of future days that kiss belie,
Which, with a generous shout, the crowd did ratify.

XXV.

Constant to the fair Armenian,
Gentle pleasures round her moved,
Like a tutelary spirit
Reverenced, like a sister, loved.
Christian meekness smoothed for all the path of life,
Who, loving most, should wiseliest love, their only strife.

Mute memento of that union
 In a Saxon church survives,
 Where a cross-legged Knight lies sculptured

ENOUGH of rose-bud lips, and eyes
 Like harebells bathed in dew,
 Of cheek that with carnation vies
 And veins of violet hue;†

* Peter Henry Bruce, having given in his entertaining Memoirs the substance of this Tale affirms that, besides the concurring reports of others, he had the story from the lady's own mouth.

The Lady Catherine, mentioned towards the close, is the famous Catherine, then bearing that name as the acknowledged Wife of Peter the Great.—W. W., 1835.

The title of this poem in the MS. copy by Mrs Wordsworth is—

I N A,

OR,

THE LODGE IN THE FOREST,

A Russian Tale.

—ED.

† Compare S. T. Coleridge's verses, To a Lady—

“’Tis not the lily brow I prize,
 Nor roseate cheeks, nor sunny eyes,
 Enough of lilies, and of roses;
 A thousand-fold more dear to me,
 The look that gentle Love discloses,—
 That look which love alone can see.”

Also Keats' lines beginning—

“Woman! when I beheld thee flippant, vain.” —Eo.

Earth wants not beauty that may scorn
 A likening to frail flowers ;
 Yea, to the stars, if they were born<sup>1</sup>
 For seasons and for hours.

Through Moscow's gates, with gold unbarred,<sup>2</sup>
 Stepped One at dead of night,
 Whom such high beauty could not guard
 From meditated blight ;
 By stealth she passed, and fled as fast
 As doth the hunted fawn,
 Nor stopped, till in the dappling east
 Appeared unwelcome dawn.

Seven days she lurked in brake and field,
 Seven nights her course renewed,
 Sustained by what her scrip might yield,
 Or berries of the wood ;
 At length, in darkness travelling on,
 When lowly doors were shut,
 The haven of her hope she won,
 Her Foster-mother's hut.

"To put your love to dangerous proof
 I come," said she, "from far ;
 For I have left my Father's roof,
 In terror of the Czar."
 No answer did the Matron give,
 No second look she cast,
 But hung upon the Fugitive,<sup>3</sup>
 Embracing and embraced.

She led the <sup>1</sup> Lady to a seat
 Beside the glimmering fire,
 Bathed duteously her way-worn feet,
 Prevented each desire :—
 The cricket chirped, the house-dog dozed,
 And on that simple bed,
 Where she in childhood had reposed,
 Now rests her weary head.

When she, whose couch had been the sod,
 Whose curtain, pine or thorn,
 Had breathed a sigh of thanks to God,
 Who comforts the forlorn ;
 While over her the Matron bent
 Sleep sealed her eyes, and stole
 Feeling from limbs with travel spent,
 And trouble from the soul.

Refreshed, the Wanderer rose at morn.
 And soon again was dight
 In those unworthy vestments worn
 Through long and perilous flight ;
 And " O beloved Nurse," she said,
 " My thanks with silent tears
 Have unto Heaven and You been paid :
 Now listen to my fears !

" Have you forgot "—and here she smiled—

 Your star, your gem, your flower ;
 Light words, that were more lightly heard

 Is come to bitter fruit ;
 A mighty One upon me gazed ;
 I spurned his lawless suit,
 And must be hidden from his wrath :<sup>1</sup>
 You, Foster-father dear,
 Will guide me in my forward path ;
 I may not tarry here !

“ I cannot bring to utter woe
 Your proved fidelity.”—
 “ Dear Child, sweet Mistress, say not so !
 For you we both would die.”
 “ Nay, nay, I come with semblance feigned
 And cheek embrowned by art ;
 Yet, being inwardly unstained,
 With courage will depart.”

“ But whither would you, could you, flee ?
 A poor Man’s counsel take ;
 The Holy Virgin gives to me
 A thought for your dear sake ;
 Rest, shielded by our Lady’s grace,
 And soon shall you be led
 Forth to a safe abiding-place,
 Where never foot doth tread.”

PART II.

THE dwelling of this faithful pair
In a straggling village stood,
For One who breathed unquiet air
A dangerous neighbourhood ;
But wide around lay forest ground
With thickets rough and blind ;
And pine-trees made a heavy shade
Impervious to the wind.

And there, sequestered from the sight,
Was spread a treacherous swamp,
On which the noon-day sun shed light
As from a lonely lamp ;
And midway in the unsafe morass,
A single Island rose
Of firm dry ground, with healthful grass
Adorned, and shady boughs.

The Woodman knew, for such the craft
This Russian vassal plied,
That never fowler's gun, nor shaft
Of archer, there was tried ;
A sanctuary seemed the spot
From all intrusion free ;
And there he planned an artful Cot
For perfect secrecy.

With earnest pains unchecked by dread
Of Power's far-stretching hand,
The bold good Man his labour sped,
At nature's pure command ;

Heart-soothed, and busy as a wren,
While, in a hollow nook,
She moulds her sight-eluding den
Above a murmuring brook.

His task accomplished to his mind,
The twain ere break of day
Creep forth, and through the forest wind
Their solitary way ;
Few words they speak, nor dare to slack
Their pace from mile to mile,
Till they have crossed the quaking marsh,
And reached the lonely Isle.

The sun above the pine-trees showed
A bright and cheerful face ;
And Ina looked for her abode,
The promised hiding-place ;
She sought in vain, the Woodman smiled ;
No threshold could be seen,
Nor roof, nor window ;—all seemed wild
As it had ever been.

Advancing, you might guess an hour,
The front with such nice care
Is masked, 'if house it be or bower,'
But in they entered are ;
As shaggy as were wall and roof
With branches intertwined,
So smooth was all within, air-proof,
And delicately lined :

And hearth was there, and maple dish,
And cups in seemly rows,
And couch—all ready to a wish
For nurture or repose ;

And Heaven doth to her virtue grant
 That here she may abide
 In solitude, with every want
 By cautious love supplied.

No queen, before a shouting crowd,
 Led on in bridal state,
 E'er struggled with a heart so proud,
 Entering her palace gate;
 Rejoiced to bid the world farewell,
 No saintly anchoress
 E'er took possession of her cell
 With deeper thankfulness.

"Father of all, upon thy care
 And mercy am I thrown;
 Be thou my safeguard!"—such her prayer
 When she was left alone,
 Kneeling amid the wilderness
 When joy had passed away,
 And smiles, fond efforts of distress
 To hide what they betray!<sup>1</sup>

The prayer is heard, the Saints have seen,
 Diffused through form and face,
 Resolves devotedly serene;
 That monumental grace
 Of Faith, which doth all passions tame<sup>2</sup>
 That Reason should control;
 And shows in the untrembling frame
 A statue of the soul.

PART III.

'Tis sung in ancient minstrelsy
 That Phœbus wont to wear
 The leaves of any pleasant tree
 Around his golden hair ;*
 Till Daphne, desperate with pursuit
 Of his imperious love,
 At her own prayer transformed, took root,
 A laurel in the grove.

Then did the Penitent adorn
 His brow with laurel green ;
 And 'mid his bright locks never shorn
 No meaner leaf was seen ;
 And poets sage, through every age,
 About their temples wound
 The bay ; and conquerors thanked the Gods,
 With laurel chaplets crowned.

Into the mists of fabling Time
 So far runs back the praise
 Of Beauty, that disdains to climb
 Along forbidden ways ;
 That scorns temptation ; power defies
 Where mutual love is not ;
 And to the tomb for rescue flies
 When life would be a blot.

To this fair Votaress, a fate
 More mild doth Heaven ordain
 Upon her Island desolate ;
 And words, not breathed in vain,

Might tell what intercourse she found,
Her silence to endear ;
What birds she tamed, what flowers the ground
Sent forth her peace to cheer.

To one mute Presence, above all,
Her soothed affections clung,
A picture on the cabin wall
By Russian usage hung—
The Mother-maid,* whose countenance bright
With love abridged the day ;
And, communed with by taper light,
Chased spectral fears away.

And oft, as either Guardian came,
The joy in that retreat
Might any common friendship shame,
So high their hearts would beat ;
And to the lone Recluse, whate'er
They brought, each visiting
Was like the crowding of the year
With a new burst of spring.

But, when she of her Parents thought,
The pang was hard to bear ;
And, if with all things not enwrought,
That trouble still is near.
Before her flight she had not dared
Their constancy to prove,
Too much the heroic Daughter feared
The weakness of their love.

Dark is the past to them, and dark
 The future still must be,
 Till pitying Saints conduct her bark
 Into a safer sea—
 Or gentle Nature close her eyes
 And set her Spirit free
 From the altar of this sacrifice,
 In vestal purity.

Yet, when above the forest-glooms
 The white swans southward passed,
 High as the pitch of their swift plumes
 Her fancy rode the blast ;
 And bore her toward the fields of France,
 Her father's native land,
 To mingle in the rustic dance,
 The happiest of the band !

Of those belovèd fields she oft
 Had heard her Father tell
 In phrase that now with echoes soft
 Haunted her lonely cell ;
 She saw the hereditary bowers,
 She heard the ancestral stream ;
 The Kremlin* and its haughty towers
 Forgotten like a dream !

PART IV.

The ever-changing moon had traced
 Twelve times her monthly round,
 When through the unfrequented Waste
 Was heard a startling sound ;

---

* The Royal Palace at Moscow.—ED.

A shout thrice sent from one who chased
 At speed a wounded deer,
 Bounding through branches interlaced,
 And where the wood was clear.

The fainting creature took the marsh,
 And toward the Island fled,
 While plovers screamed with tumult harsh
 Above his antlered head ;
 This, Ina saw ; and, pale with fear,
 Shrunk to her citadel ;
 The desperate deer rushed on, and near
 The tangled covert fell.

Across the marsh, the game in view,
 The Hunter followed fast,
 Nor paused, till o'er the stag he blew
 A death-proclaiming blast ;
 Then, resting on her upright mind,
 Came forth the Maid—" In me
 Behold," she said, " a stricken Hind
 Pursued by destiny !

" From your deportment, Sir ! I deem
 That you have worn a sword,
 And will not hold in light esteem
 A suffering woman's word ;
 There is my covert, there perchance
 I might have lain concealed,
 My fortunes hid, my countenance
 Not even to you revealed.

" Tears might be shed, and I might pray,
 Crouching and terrified,
 That what has been unveiled to-day,
 You would in mystery hide ;

But I will not defile with dust
 The knee that bends to adore
 The God in heaven ;—attend, be just ;
 This ask I, and no more !

“ I speak not of the winter’s cold,
 For summer’s heat exchanged,
 While I have lodged in this rough hold,
 From social life estranged ;
 Nor yet of trouble and alarms :
 High Heaven is my defence ;
 And every season has soft arms
 For injured Innocence.

“ From Moscow to the Wilderness
 It was my choice to come,
 Lest virtue should be harbourless,
 And honour want a home ;
 And happy were I, if the Czar
 Retain his lawless will,
 To end life here like this poor deer,
 Or a lamb on a green hill.”

“ Are you the Maid,” the Stranger cried,
 “ From Gallic parents sprung,
 Whose vanishing was rumoured wide
 Sad theme for every tongue ;
 Who foiled an Emperor’s eager quest ?
 You, Lady, forced to wear
 These rude habiliments, and rest
 Your head in this dark lair !”

But wonder, pity, soon were quelled ;
 And in her face and mien
 The soul’s pure brightness he beheld
 Without a veil between ;

He loved, he hoped,—a holy flame
 Kindled 'mid rapturous tears ;
 The passion of a moment came
 As on the wings of years.

“ Such bounty is no gift of chance,”
 Exclaimed he ; “ righteous Heaven,
 Preparing your deliverance,
 To me the charge hath given.
 The Czar full oft in words and deeds
 Is stormy and self-willed ;
 But, when the Lady Catherine pleads,
 His violence is stilled.

“ Leave open to my wish the course,
 And I to her will go ;
 From that humane and heavenly source,
 Good, only good, can flow.”
 Faint sanction given, the Cavalier
 Was eager to depart
 Though question followed question, dear
 To the Maiden's filial heart.<sup>1</sup>

Light was his step,—his hopes, more light,
 Kept pace with his desire ;
 And the fifth <sup>2</sup> morning gave him sight
 Of Moscow's glittering spires.

He sued :—heart-smitten by the wrong,
 To the lorn Fugitive
 The Emperor sent a pledge as strong
 As sovereign power could give.

O more than mighty change! If e'er
 Amazement rose to pain,
 And joy's excess <sup>1</sup> produced a fear
 Of something void and vain ;
 'Twas when the Parents, who had mourned
 So long the lost as dead,
 Beheld their only Child returned,
 The household floor to tread.

Soon gratitude gave way to love
 Within the Maiden's breast :
 Delivered and Deliverer move
 In bridal garments drest.
 Meek Catherine had her own reward ;
 The Czar bestowed a dower ;
 And universal Moscow shared
 The triumph of that hour.

Flowers strewed the ground ; the nuptial feast
 Was held with costly state ;
 And there, 'mid many a noble guest,
 The Foster-parents sate ;
 Encouraged by the imperial eye,
 They shrank not into shade ;
 Great was their bliss, the honour high
 To them and nature paid !

THE EGYPTIAN MAID ;

OR, THE ROMANCE OF THE WATER LILY.

Comp. 1830. — Pub. 1835.

For the names and persons in the following poem, see the "History of the renowned Prince Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table ;" for the rest the Author is answerable ; only it may be proper to add that the Lotus, with the bust of the Goddess appearing to rise out of the full-blown flower, was suggested by the beautiful work of ancient art, once included among the Townley Marbles, and now in the British Museum.

[In addition to the short notice prefixed to this poem, it may be worth while here to say, that it rose out of a few words casually used in conversation by my nephew, Henry Hutchinson. He was describing with great spirit the appearance and movement of a vessel which he seemed to admire more than any other he had ever seen, and said her name was the Water Lily. This plant has been my delight from my boyhood, as I have seen it floating on the lake ; and that conversation put me upon constructing and composing the poem. Had I not heard those words, it would never have been written. The form of the stanza is new, and is nothing but a repetition of the first five lines as they were thrown off, and is not perhaps well suited to narrative, and certainly would not have been trusted to had I thought at the beginning that the poem would have gone to such a length.]

WHILE Merlin paced the Cornish sands,
 Forth-looking toward the rocks of Scilly,
 The pleased Enchanter was aware
 Of a bright Ship, that seemed to hang in air,
 Yet was she work of mortal hands,
 And took from men her name—THE WATER LILY.

Soft was the wind, that landward blew ;
 And, as the Moon, o'er some dark hill ascendant,
 Grows from a little edge of light
 To a full orb, this Pinnacle bright
 Became, as nearer to the coast she drew,
 More glorious, with spread sail and streaming pendant.

Upon this wingèd Shape so fair
 Sage Merlin gazed with admiration :
 Her lineaments, thought he, surpass
 Aught that was ever shown in magic glass ;
 Was ever built with patient care ;
 Or, at a touch, produced by happiest transformation.<sup>1</sup>

Now, though a Mechanist, whose skill
 Shames the degenerate grasp of modern science,
 Grave Merlin (and belike the more
 For practising occult and perilous lore)
 Was subject to a freakish will
 That sapped good thoughts, or scared them with defiance.

Provoked to envious spleen, he cast
 An altered look upon the advancing Stranger
 Whom he had hailed with joy, and cried,
 " My Art shall help to tame her pride—"
 Anon the breeze became a blast,
 And the waves rose, and sky portended danger.

With thrilling word, and potent sign
 Traced on the beach, his work the Sorcerer urges ;
 The clouds in blacker clouds are lost,
 Like spiteful Fiends that vanish, crossed
 By Fiends of aspect more malign ;
 And the winds roused the Deep with fiercer scourges.

But worthy of the name she bore
 Was this Sea-flower, this buoyant Galley ;
 Supreme in loveliness and grace
 Of motion, whether in the embrace
 Of trusty anchorage, or scudding o'er
 The main flood roughened into hill and valley.

<sup>1</sup> 1837.

Or, at a touch, set forth with wondrous transformation.

1835.

Behold, how wantonly she laves
 Her sides, the Wizard's craft confounding ;
 Like something out of Ocean sprung
 To be for ever fresh and young,
 Breasts the sea-flashes, and huge waves
 Top-gallant high, rebounding and rebounding !

But Ocean under magic heaves,
 And cannot spare the Thing he cherished :
 Ah ! what avails that she was fair,
 Luminous, blithe, and debonair ?
 The storm has stripped her of her leaves ;
 The Lily floats no longer !—she hath perished.

Grieve for her,—she deserves no less ;
 So like, yet so unlike, a living Creature !
 No heart had she, no busy brain ;
 Though loved, she could not love again ;
 Though pitied, feel her own distress ;
 Nor aught that troubles us, the fools of Nature.

Yet is there cause for gushing tears,
 So richly was this Galley laden ;
 A fairer than herself she bore,
 And, in her struggles, cast ashore ;
 A lovely One, who nothing hears
 Of wind or wave—a meek and guileless Maiden.

Into a cave had Merlin fled
 From mischief, caused by spells himself had muttered ;
 And while, repentant all too late,
 In moody posture there he sate,
 He heard a voice, and saw, with half-raised head,
 A Visitant by whom these words were uttered ;

“ On Christian service this frail Bark
 Sailed (hear me, Merlin !) under high protection,
 Though on her prow a sign of heathen power
 Was carved—a Goddess with a Lily flower,
 The old Egyptian’s emblematic mark
 Of joy immortal and of pure affection.

Her course was for the British strand ;
 Her freight, it was a Damsel peerless ;
 God reigns above, and Spirits strong
 May gather to avenge this wrong
 Done to the Princess, and her Land
 Which she in duty left, sad but not cheerless.<sup>1</sup>

And to Caerleon’s loftiest tower
 Soon will the Knights of Arthur’s Table
 A cry of lamentation send ;
 And all will weep who there attend,
 To grace that Stranger’s bridal hour,
 For whom the sea was made unnavigable.

Shame ! should a Child of royal line
 Die through the blindness of thy malice !”
 Thus to the Necromancer spake
 Nina, the Lady of the Lake,
 A gentle Sorceress, and benign,
 Who ne’er embittered any good man’s chalice.

“ What boots,” continued she, “ to mourn ?
 To expiate thy sin endeavour :
 From the bleak isle where she is laid,
 Fetched by our art, the Egyptian Maid
 May yet to Arthur’s court be borne
 Cold as she is, ere life be fled for ever.

<sup>1</sup> 1837.

. . . . . , though sad not cheerless. 1835.

My pearly Boat, a shining Light,
 That brought me down that sunless river,
 Will bear me on from wave to wave,
 And back with her to this sea-cave ;—
 Then Merlin ! for a rapid flight
 Through air, to thee my Charge will I deliver.

The very swiftest of thy cars
 Must, when my part is done, be ready ;
 Meanwhile, for further guidance, look
 Into thy own prophetic book ;
 And, if that fail, consult the Stars
 To learn thy course ; farewell ! be prompt and steady.”

This scarcely spoken, she again
 Was seated in her gleaming shallop,
 That, o'er the yet-distempered Deep,
 Pursued its way with bird-like sweep,
 Or like a steed, without a rein,
 Urged o'er the wilderness in sportive gallop.

Soon did the gentle Nina reach
 That Isle without a house or haven ;
 Landing, she found not what she sought,
 Nor saw of wreck or ruin aught
 But a carved Lotus cast upon the beach<sup>1</sup>
 By the fierce waves, a flower in marble graven.

Sad relique, but how fair the while !
 For gently each from each retreating
 With backward curve, the leaves revealed
 The bosom half, and half concealed,
 Of a Divinity, that seemed to smile
 On Nina, as she passed, with hopeful greeting.

shore.

1885

No quest was hers of vague desire,
 Of tortured hope and purpose shaken
 Following the margin of a bay,
 She spied the lonely Cast-away,
 Unmarred, unstripped of her attire,
 But with closed eyes,—of breath and bloom forsaken.

Then Nina, stooping down, embraced,
 With tenderness and mild emotion,
 The Damsel, in that trance embound ;
 And, while she raised her from the ground,
 And in the pearly shallop placed,
 Sleep fell upon the air, and stilled the ocean.

The turmoil hushed, celestial springs
 Of music opened, and there came a blending
 Of fragrance, underived from earth,
 With gleams that owed not to the sun their birth,
 And that soft rustling of invisible wings
 Which Angels make, on works of love descending.

And Nina heard a sweeter voice
 Than if the Goddess of the flower had spoken :
 “Thou hast achieved, fair Dame ! what none
 Less pure in spirit could have done ;
 Go, in thy enterprise rejoice !
 Air, earth, sea, sky, and heaven, success betoken.”

So cheered, she left that Island bleak,
 A bare rock of the Scilly cluster ;
 And, as they traversed the smooth brine,
 The self-illumined Brigantine
 Shed, on the Slumberer's cold wan cheek
 And pallid brow, a melancholy lustre.

Fleet was their course, and when they came
 To the dim cavern, whence the river
 Issued into the salt-sea flood,
 Merlin, as fixed in thought he stood,
 Was thus accosted by the Dame ;
 " Behold to thee my Charge I now deliver !

But where attends thy chariot—where ?"—
 Quoth Merlin, " Even as I was bidden,
 So have I done ; as trusty as thy barge
 My vehicle shall prove—O precious Charge !
 If this be sleep, how soft ! if death, how fair !
 Much have my books disclosed, but the end is hidden."

He spake ; and gliding into view
 Forth from the grotto's dimmest chamber
 Came two mute Swans, whose plumes of dusky white
 Changed as the pair approached the light,
 Drawing an ebon car, their hue
 (Like clouds of sunset) into lucid amber.

Once more did gentle Nina lift
 The Princess, passive to all changes :
 The car received her :—then up-went
 Into the ethereal element
 The Birds with progress smooth and swift
 As thought, when through bright regions memory ranges.

Sage Merlin, at the Slumberer's side,
 Instructs the Swans their way to measure ;
 And soon Caerleon's towers appeared,
 And notes of minstrelsy were heard
 From rich pavilions spreading wide,
 For some high day of long-expected pleasure.

Awe-stricken stood both Knights and Dames
 Ere on firm ground the car alighted ;
 Eftsoons astonishment was past,
 For in that face they saw the last,
 Last lingering look of clay, that tames
 All pride ; by which all happiness is blighted.

Said Merlin, " Mighty King, fair Lords,
 Away with feast and tilt and tourney !
 Ye saw, throughout this royal House,
 Ye heard, a rocking marvellous
 Of turrets, and a clash of swords
 Self-shaken, as I closed my airy journey.

Lo ! by a destiny well known
 To mortals, joy is turned to sorrow ;
 This is the wished-for Bride, the Maid
 Of Egypt, from a rock conveyed
 Where she by shipwreck had been thrown ;
 Ill sight ! but grief may vanish ere the morrow."

" Though vast thy power, thy words are weak,"
 Exclaimed the King, " a mockery hateful ;
 Dutiful Child, her lot how hard !
 Is this her piety's reward ?
 Those watery locks, that bloodless cheek !
 O winds without remorse ! O shore ungrateful !

Rich robes are fretted by the moth ;
 Towers, temples, fall by stroke of thunder ;
 Will that, or deeper thoughts, abate
 A Father's sorrow for her fate ?
 He will repent him of his troth ;
 His brain will burn, his stout heart split asunder.

Alas ! and I have caused this woe ;
 For, when my prowess from invading Neighbours
 Had freed his Realm, he plighted word
 That he would turn to Christ our Lord,
 And his dear Daughter on a Knight bestow
 Whom I should choose for love and matchless labours.

Her birth was heathen ; but a fence
 Of holy Angels round her hovered :
 A Lady added to my court
 So fair, of such divine report
 And worship, seemed a recompense
 For fifty kingdoms by my sword recovered.

Ask not for whom, O Champions true !
 She was reserved by me her life's betrayer ;
 She who was meant to be a bride
 Is now a corse : then put aside
 Vain thoughts, and speed ye, with observance due
 Of Christian rites, in Christian ground to lay her."

"The tomb," said Merlin, "may not close
 Upon her yet, earth hide her beauty ;
 Not froward to thy sovereign will
 Esteem me, Liege ! if I, whose skill
 Wafted her hither, interpose
 To check this pious haste of erring duty.

My books command me to lay bare
 The secret thou art bent on keeping :
 Here must a high attest be given,
What Bridegroom was for her ordained by Heaven :
 And in my glass significant there are
 Of things that may to gladness turn this weeping.

For this, approaching One by One,
 Thy Knights must touch the cold hand of the Virgin ;
 So, for the favoured One, the Flower may bloom
 Once more : but, if unchangeable her doom,
 If life departed be for ever gone,
 Some blest assurance, from this cloud emerging,

May teach him to bewail his loss ;
 Not with a grief that, like a vapour, rises
 And melts ; but grief devout that shall endure,
 And a perpetual growth secure
 Of purposes which no false thought shall cross,
 A harvest of high hopes and noble enterprises.

“ So be it,” said the King ;—“ anon,
 Here, where the Princess lies, begin the trial ;
 Knights, each in order as ye stand
 Step forth.”—To touch the pallid hand
 Sir Agravaine advanced ; no sign he won
 From Heaven or earth ;—Sir Kaye had like denial.

Abashed, Sir Dinas turned away ;
 Even for Sir Percival was no disclosure ;
 Though he, devoutest of all Champions, ere
 He reached that ebon car, the bier
 Whereon diffused like snow the Damsel lay,
 Full thrice had crossed himself in meek composure.

Imagine (but ye Saints ! who can ?)
 How in still air the balance trembled—
 The wishes, peradventure the despites
 That overcame some not ungenerous Knights ;
 And all the thoughts that lengthened out a span
 Of time to Lords and Ladies thus assembled.

What patient confidence was here !
 And there how many bosoms panted !
 While drawing toward the car Sir Gawaine, mailed
 For tournament, his beaver veiled,
 And softly touched ; but, to his princely cheer
 And high expectancy, no sign was granted.

Next, disencumbered of his harp,
 Sir Tristram, dear to thousands as a brother,
 Came to the proof, nor grieved that there ensued
 No change ;—the fair Izonda he had wooed
 With love too true, a love with pangs too sharp,
 From hope too distant, not to dread another.

Not so Sir Launcelot ; from Heaven's grace
 A sign he craved, tired slave of vain contrition ;
 The royal Guinever looked passing glad
 When his touch failed.—Next came Sir Galahad ;
 He paused, and stood entranced by that still face
 Whose features he had seen in noontide vision.

For late, as near a murmuring stream
 He rested 'mid an arbour green and shady,
 Nina, the good Enchantress, shed
 A light around his mossy bed ;
 And, at her call, a waking dream
 Prefigured to his sense the Egyptian Lady.

Now, while his bright-haired front he bowed,
 And stood, far-kenned by mantle furred with ermine,
 As o'er the insensate Body hung
 The enrapt, the beautiful, the young,
 Belief sank deep into the crowd
 That he the solemn issue would determine.

Nor deem it strange ; the Youth had worn
 That very mantle on a day of glory,
 The day when he achieved that matchless feat,
 The marvel of the PERILOUS SEAT,
 Which whosoe'er approached of strength was shorn,
 Though King or Knight the most renowned in story.

He touched with hesitating hand—
 And lo ! those Birds, far-famed through Love's dominions,
 The Swans, in triumph clap their wings ;
 And their necks play, involved in rings,
 Like sinless snakes in Eden's happy land ;—
 Mine is she," cried the Knight ;—again they clapped their pinions.

" Mine was she—mine she is, though dead,
 And to her name my soul shall cleave in sorrow ;"
 Whereat, a tender twilight streak
 Of colour dawned upon the Damsel's cheek ;
 And her lips, quickening with uncertain red,
 Seemed from each other a faint warmth to borrow.

Deep was the awe, the rapture high,
 Of love emboldened, hope with dread entwining,
 When, to the mouth, relenting Death
 Allowed a soft and flower-like breath,
 Precursor to a timid sigh,
 To lifted eyelids, and a doubtful shining.

In silence did King Arthur gaze
 Upon the signs that pass away or tarry ;
 In silence watched the gentle strife
 Of Nature leading back to life ;
 Then eased his soul at length by praise
 Of God, and Heaven's pure Queen—the blissful Mary.

Then said he, "Take her to thy heart,
 Sir Galahad! a treasure, that God giveth,
 Bound by indissoluble ties to thee
 Through mortal change and immortality;
 Be happy and unenvied, thou who art
 A goodly Knight that hath no peer that liveth!"

Not long the Nuptials were delayed;
 And sage tradition still rehearses
 The pomp, the glory of that hour
 When toward the altar from her bower
 King Arthur led the Egyptian Maid,
 And Angels carolled these far-echoed verses;—

Who shrinks not from alliance
 Of evil with good Powers
 To God proclaims defiance,
 And mocks whom he adores.

A Ship to Christ devoted
 From the Land of Nile did go;
 Alas! the bright Ship floated,
 An Idol at her prow.

By magic domination,
 The Heaven-permitted vent
 Of purblind mortal passion,
 Was wrought her punishment.

The Flower, the Form within it,
 What served they in her need?
 Her port she could not win it,
 Nor from mishap be freed.

The tempest overcame her,
 And she was seen no more ;
 But gently, gently blame her—
 She cast a Pearl ashore.

The Maid to Jesu hearkened,
 And kept to him her faith,
 Till sense in death was darkened,
 Or sleep akin to death.

But Angels round her pillow
 Kept watch, a viewless band ;
 And, billow favouring billow,
 She reached the destined strand.

Blest Pair ! whate'er befall you,
 Your faith in Him approve
 Who from frail earth can call you
 To bowers of endless love !

THE POET AND THE CAGED TURTLEDOVE.*

Comp. 1830. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount. This dove was one of a pair that had been given to my daughter by our excellent friend, Miss Jewsbury,† who went to India with her husband, Mr Fletcher, where she died of cholera. The dove survived its mate many years, and was killed, to our great sorrow, by a neighbour's cat that got in at the window and dragged it partly out of the cage. These verses were composed extempore, to the letter, in the Terrace Summer-house before spoken of. It was the habit of the bird to begin cooing and murmuring whenever it heard me making my verses.]

* In a MS. letter to Sir George Beaumont I find the poem entitled "Twenty minutes Exercise on the Terrace last night, but scene within doors."—Ed.

† Compare the Sonnet beginning "While Anna's peers and early play-mates tread," p. 163.—Ed.

As often as I murmur here
 My half-formed melodies,
 Straight from her osier mansion near,
 The Turtledove replies :
 Though silent as a leaf before,
 The captive promptly coos ;
 Is it to teach her own soft lore,
 Or second my weak Muse ?

I rather think, the gentle Dove
 Is murmuring a reproof,
 Displeased that I from lays of love
 Have dared to keep aloof ;
 That I, a Bard of hill and dale,
 Have caroll'd, fancy free,
 As if nor dove nor nightingale,
 Had heart or voice for me.

If such thy meaning, O forbear,
 Sweet Bird ! to do me wrong ;
 Love, blessed Love, is every where,
 The spirit of my song :
 'Mid grove, and by the calm fireside,
 Love animates my lyre—
 That coo again !—'tis not to chide,
 I feel, but to inspire.

PRESENTIMENTS.

Comp. 1830. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount.]

PRESENTIMENTS ! they judge not right
 Who deem that ye from open light
 Retire in fear of shame ;

All heaven-born Instincts shun the touch
 Of vulgar sense,—and, being such,
 Such privilege ye claim.

The tear whose source I could not guess,
 The deep sigh that seemed fatherless,
 Were mine in early days ;
 And now, unforced by time to part
 With fancy, I obey my heart,
 And venture on your praise.

What though some busy foes to good
 Too potent over nerve and blood,
 Lurk near you—and combine
 To taint the health which ye infuse ;
 This hides not from the moral Muse
 Your origin divine.

How oft from you, derided Powers !
 Comes Faith that in auspicious hours
 Builds castles, not of air :
 Bodings unsanctioned by the will
 Flow from your visionary skill,
 And teach us to beware.

The bosom-weight, your stubborn gift,
 That no philosophy can lift,
 Shall vanish, if ye please,
 Like morning mist : and, where it lay,
 The spirits at your bidding play
 In gaiety and ease.

Star-guided contemplations move
 Through space, though calm, not raised above
 Prognostics that ye rule ;

The naked Indian of the wild,
 And haply, too, the cradled Child,
     Are pupils of your school.

But who can fathom your intents,
 Number their signs or instruments ?
     A rainbow, a sunbeam,
 A subtle smell that Spring unbinds,
 Dead pause abrupt of midnight winds,
     An echo, or a dream.*

The laughter of the Christmas hearth
 With sighs of self-exhausted mirth
     Ye feelingly reprove :
 And daily, in the conscious breast,
 Your visitations are a test
     And exercise of love.

When some great change gives boundless scope
 To an exulting Nation's hope,
     Oft, startled and made wise
 By your low-breathed interpretings,
 The simply-meek foretaste the springs
     Of bitter contraries.

Ye daunt the proud array of war,
 Pervade the lonely ocean far
     As sail hath been unfurled ;
 For dancers in the festive hall

* Compare Robert Browning's Bishop Brougham's Apology—

“ . . . There's a sunset-touch,
 A fancy from a flower-bell, some one's death,
 A chorus ending from Euripides,—
 And that's enough for fifty hopes and fears
 As old and new at once as Nature's self,
 To rap and knock and enter in our soul,
 Take hands and dance there, a fantastic ring,” &c.—Ed.

INSCRIPTION.

What ghastly partners hath your call-
 Fetched from the shadowy world !

'Tis said that warnings ye dispense,
 Emboldened by a keener sense ;
 That men have lived for whom,
 With dread precision, ye made clear
 The hour that in a distant year
 Should knell them to the tomb.

Unwelcome insight ! Yet there are
 Blest times when mystery is laid bare,
 Truth shows a glorious face,
 While on that isthmus which commands
 The councils of both worlds, she stands,
 Sage Spirits ! by your grace.

God, who instructs the brutes to scent
 All changes of the element,
 Whose wisdom fixed the scale
 Of natures, for our wants provides
 By higher, sometimes humbler, guides,
 When lights of reason fail.

INTENDED FOR A STONE IN THE GROUNDS OF RYDAL MOUNT. 1835.

Comp. 1830. — Pub. 1835.

[Engraven, during my absence in Italy, upon a brass plate inserted in the Stone.]

IN these fair vales hath many a Tree
 At Wordsworth's suit been spared ;
 And from the builder's hand this Stone,

For some rude beauty of its own,
 Was rescued by the Bard :
 So let it rest ; and time will come
 When here the tender-hearted
 May heave a gentle sigh for him,
 As one of the departed.

This inscription is still preserved on a brass plate in a stone, within the grounds at Rydal Mount.—Ed.

ELEGIAC MUSINGS.

IN THE GROUNDS OF COLEORTON HALL, THE SEAT OF THE LATE*
 SIR G. H. BEAUMONT, BART.

Comp. 1830. — Pub. 1835.

[These verses were in part composed on horseback during a storm, while I was on my way from Coleorton to Cambridge: they are alluded to elsewhere.]†

In these grounds stands the Parish Church, wherein is a mural monument bearing an Inscription which, in deference to the earnest request of the deceased, is confined to name, dates, and these words :—
 “Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord !”

WITH copious eulogy in prose or rhyme<sup>1</sup>
 Graven on the tomb we struggle against Time,
 Alas, how feebly ! but our feelings rise
 And still we struggle when a good man dies ;
 Such offering BEAUMONT dreaded and forbade,
 A spirit meek in self-abasement clad.
 Yet here at least, though few have numbered days
 That shunned so modestly the light of praise—
 His graceful manners, and the temperate ray
 Of that arch fancy which would round him play,
 Brightening a converse never known to swerve

From courtesy and delicate reserve ;
 That sense, the bland philosophy of life,
 Which checked discussion ere it warmed to strife—
 Those rare accomplishments,<sup>1</sup> and varied powers,
 Might have their record among sylvan bowers.
 Oh, fled for ever ! vanished like a blast
 That shook the leaves in myriads as it passed ;—
 Gone from this world of earth, air, sea, and sky,
 From all its spirit-moving imagery,
 Intensely studied with a painter's eye,
 A poet's heart ; and, for congenial view,
 Portrayed with happiest pencil, not untrue
 To common recognitions while the line
 Flowed in a course of sympathy divine ;—
 Oh ! severed, too abruptly, from delights
 That all the seasons shared with equal rights ;—
 Rapt in the grace of undismantled age,
 From soul-felt music, and the treasured page
 Lit by that evening lamp which loved to shed
 Its mellow lustre round thy honoured head ;
 While Friends beheld thee give with eye, voice, mien,
 More than theatric force to Shakspeare's scene ;—*
 If thou hast heard me—if thy Spirit know
 Aught of these bowers and whence their pleasures flow ;
 If things in our remembrance held so dear,
 And thoughts and projects fondly cherished here,
 To thy exalted nature only seem
 Time's vanities, light fragments of earth's dream—

Rebuke<sup>1</sup> us not!—The mandate is obeyed
 That said, "Let praise be mute where I am laid;"
 The holier deprecation, given in trust
 To the cold marble, waits upon thy dust;
 Yet have we found how slowly genuine grief
 From silent admiration wins relief.
 Too long abashed thy Name is like a rose
 That doth "within itself its sweetness close;"
 A drooping daisy changed into a cup
 In which her bright-eyed beauty is shut up.
 Within these groves, where still are flitting by
 Shades of the Past, oft noticed with a sigh,
 Shall stand a votive Tablet,* haply free,
 When towers and temples fall, to speak of Thee!
 If sculptured emblems of our mortal doom
 Recal not there the wisdom of the Tomb,
 Green ivy risen from out the cheerful earth
 Will fringe<sup>2</sup> the lettered stone; and herbs spring forth.
 Whose fragrance, by soft dews and rain unbound,
 Shall penetrate the heart without a wound;
 While truth and love their purposes fulfil,
 Commemorating genius, talent, skill,
 That could not lie concealed where Thou wert known;
 Thy virtues He must judge, and He alone,
 The God upon whose mercy they are thrown.

[I have reason to remember the day that gave rise to this Sonnet, the 6th of November, 1830. Having undertaken, a great feat for me, to ride my daughter's pony from Westmoreland to Cambridge, that she might have the use of it while on a visit to her uncle at Trinity Lodge, on my way from Batewell to Matlock I turned aside to Chatsworth, and had scarcely gratified my curiosity by the sight of that celebrated place before there came on a severe storm of wind and rain which continued till I reached Derby, both man and pony in a pitiable plight. For myself, I went to bed at noon-day. In the course of that journey I had to encounter a storm worse if possible, in which the pony could (or would) only make his way slantwise. I mention this merely to add that notwithstanding this battering I composed, on horseback, the lines to the memory of Sir George Beaumont, suggested during my recent visit to Coleorton.]

CHATSWORTH! thy stately mansion, and the pride
 Of thy domain, strange contrast do present
 To house and home in many a craggy rent
 Of the wild Peak; where new-born waters glide
 Through fields whose thrifty occupants abide
 As in a dear and chosen banishment,
 With every semblance of entire content;
 So kind is simple Nature, fairly tried!
 Yet He whose heart in childhood gave her troth
 To pastoral dales, thin-set with modest farms,
 May learn, if judgment strengthen with his growth,
 That, not for Fancy only, pomp hath charms;
 And, strenuous to protect from lawless harms
 The extremes of favoured life, may honour both.

[The last six lines of this Sonnet are not written for poetical effect, but as a matter of fact, which, in more than one instance, could not escape my notice in the servants of the house.]

Go, faithful Portrait! and where long hath knelt
 Margaret, the saintly Foundress, take thy place;
 And, if Time spare the colours * for the grace
 Which to the work surpassing skill hath dealt,
 Thou, on thy rock reclined, though kingdoms melt
 And states be torn up by the roots, † wilt seem
 To breathe in rural peace, to hear the stream,
 And<sup>1</sup> think and feel as once the Poet felt.
 Whate'er thy fate, those features have not grown
 Unrecognised through many a household tear
 More prompt, more glad, to fall than drops of dew
 By morning shed around a flower half-blown;
 Tears of delight, that testified how true
 To life thou art, and, in thy truth, how dear!

THE PRIMROSE OF THE ROCK.

Comp. 1831. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount. The Rock stands on the right hand a little way leading up the middle road from Rydal to Grasmere. We have been in the habit of calling it the glow-worm rock from the number of glow-worms we have often seen hanging on it as described. The tuft of primrose has, I fear, been washed away by the heavy rains.]

A ROCK there is whose homely front
 The passing traveller slights ;
 Yet there the glow-worms hang their lamps,
 Like stars, at various heights :
 And one coy Primrose to that Rock
 The vernal breeze invites.

What hideous warfare hath been waged,
 What kingdoms overthrown,
 Since first I spied that Primrose-tuft
 And marked it for my own ; *
 A lasting link in Nature's chain
 From highest heaven let down !

---

* In Dorothy Wordsworth's Grasmere Journal the following occurs:— April 24, 1802.—“ We walked in the evening to Rydal. Coleridge and I lingered behind. We all stood to look at Glow-worm Rock—a primrose that grew there, and just looked out on the road from its own sheltered bower.” The Primrose had disappeared when the Fenwick note was dictated, and the Glow-worms have almost deserted the district ; but the Rock is unmistakable, and is one of the most interesting of the spots connected with Wordsworth in the Lake District.—ED.

The flowers, still faithful to the stems,
 Their fellowship renew :
 The stems are faithful to the root,
 That worketh out of view ;
 And to the rock the root adheres
 In every fibre true.

Close clings to earth the living rock,
 Though threatening still to fall ;
 The earth is constant to her sphere ;
 And God upholds them all :
 So blooms this lonely Plant, nor dreads
 Her annual funeral.

. . . . .
 Here closed the meditative strain ;
 But air breathed soft that day,
 The hoary mountain-heights were cheered,
 The sunny vale looked gay,
 And to the Primrose of the Rock
 I give this after-lay.

I sang—Let myriads of bright flowers,
 Like Thee, in field and grove
 Revive unenvied ;—mightier far,
 Than tremblings that reprove
 Our vernal tendencies to hope,
 Is God's redeeming love ;

That love which changed—for wan disease,
 For sorrow that had bent
 O'er hopeless dust, for withered age—
 Their moral element,
 And turned the thistles of a curse
 To types beneficent.

Sin-blighted though we are, we too,
 The reasoning Sons of Men,
 From one oblivious winter called
 Shall rise, and breathe again ;
 And in eternal summer lose
 Our threescore years and ten.

To humbleness of heart descends
 This prescience from on high,
 The faith that elevates the just,
 Before and when they die ;
 And makes each soul a separate heaven,
 A court for Deity.

YARROW REVISITED, AND OTHER POEMS,

COMPOSED (TWO EXCEPTED) DURING A TOUR IN SCOTLAND,
 AND ON THE ENGLISH BORDER, IN THE AUTUMN OF 1831.

Comp. 1831. — Pub. 1835.

[In the autumn of 1831, my daughter and I set off from Rydal to visit Sir Walter Scott before his departure for Italy. This journey had been delayed by an inflammation in my eyes till we found that the time appointed for his leaving home would be too near for him to receive us without considerable inconvenience. Nevertheless we proceeded and reached Abbotsford on Monday. I was then scarcely able to lift up my eyes to the light. How sadly changed did I find him from the man I had seen so healthy, gay, and hopeful, a few years before, when he said at the inn at Paterdale, in my presence, his daughter Anne also being there, with Mr Lockhart, my own wife and daughter, and Mr Quillinan,—“I mean to live till I am eighty, and shall write as long as I live.” But to return to Abbotsford: the inmates and guests we found there were Sir Walter, Major Scott, Anne Scott, and Mr and Mrs Lockhart, Mr Liddell, his Lady and Brother, and Mr Allan the painter, and Mr Laidlow, a very old friend of Sir Walter's. One of Burns's sons, an officer in the Indian service, had left the house a day or two before, and had kindly expressed his regret that he could not wait my arrival, a regret that I may truly say was mutual. In the evening, Mr and Mrs Liddell sang, and Mrs Lockhart chanted old ballads to her harp; and Mr Allan, hanging over the back of a chair, told and acted odd stories in a humorous way. With this exhibition and his daughter's singing, Sir Walter was much amused, as indeed were we all as far as circumstances would allow. But what is most worthy of mention is the admirable demeanour of Major Scott during the following evening when the Liddells were gone and only ourselves and Mr Allan were present. He had much to suffer from the sight of his father's infirmities and from the great change that was about to take place at the residence he had built, and where he had long lived in so much prosperity and happiness. But what struck me most was the patient kindness with which he supported himself under the many fretful expressions that his sister Anne addressed to him or uttered in his hearing. She, poor thing, as mistress of that house, had been subject, after her mother's death, to a heavier load of care and responsibility and greater sacrifices of time than one of such a constitution of body and mind was able to bear. Of this, Dora and I were made so sensible, that, as soon as we had crossed the Tweed on our departure, we gave vent at the same moment to our apprehensions that her brain would fail and she would go out of her mind, or that she would sink under the trials she had passed and those which awaited her. On Tuesday morning Sir Walter Scott accompanied us and most of the party to Newark Castle on the Yarrow. When we alighted from the carriages he walked pretty stoutly, and had great pleasure in revisiting those his favourite haunts. Of that excursion the verses "Yarrow Revisited" are a memorial. Notwithstanding the romance that pervades Sir Walter's works and attaches to many of his habits, there is too much pressure of fact for these verses to harmonise as much as I could wish with other poems. On our return in the afternoon we had to cross the Tweed directly opposite Abbotsford. The wheels of our carriage grated upon the pebbles in the bed of the stream that there flows somewhat rapidly; a rich but sad light of rather a purple than a golden hue was spread over the Eildon Hills at that moment; and, thinking it probable that it might be the last time Sir Walter would cross the stream, I was not a little moved, and expressed some of my feelings in the Sonnet beginning—"A trouble, not of clouds, or weeping rain." At noon on Thursday we left Abbotsford, and in the morning of that day Sir Walter and I had a serious conversation tête-à-tête, when he spoke with gratitude of the happy life which upon the whole he had led. He had written in my daughter's Album, before he came into the breakfast-room that morning, a few stanzas addressed to her, and, while putting the book into her hand, in his own study, standing by his desk, he said to her in my presence—"I should not have done anything of this kind but for your father's sake: they are probably the last verses I shall ever write." They show how much his mind was impaired, not by the strain of thought but by the execution, some of the lines being imperfect, and one stanza wanting corresponding rhymes: one letter, the initial S, had been omitted in the spelling of his own name. In this interview also it was that, upon my expressing a hope of his health being benefited by the climate of the country to which he was going, and by the interest he would take in the classic remembrances of Italy, he made use of the quotation from "Yarrow unvisited" as recorded by me in the "Musings of Aquapendente" six years afterwards. Mr Lockhart has mentioned in his life of him what I heard from several quarters while abroad, both at Rome and elsewhere, that little seemed to interest him but what he could collect or hear of the fugitive Stuarts and their adherents who had followed them into exile. Both the "Yarrow revisited" and the "Sonnet" were sent him before his departure from England. Some further particulars of the conversations which occurred during this visit I should have set down had they not been already accurately recorded by Mr Lockhart. I first became acquainted with this great and amiable man—Sir Walter Scott—in the year 1803, when my sister and I, making a tour in Scotland, were hospitably received by him in Lasswade upon the banks of the Esk, where he was then living. We saw a good deal of him in the course of the following week; the particulars are given in my sister's Journal of that tour.]

TO
SAMUEL ROGERS, Esq.
AS A TESTIMONY OF FRIENDSHIP, AND ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF INTELLECTUAL OBLIGATIONS, THESE MEMORIALS ARE AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED.

RYDAL MOUNT, Dec. 11, 1834.

I.

[The following Stanzas are a memorial of a day passed with Sir Walter Scott, and other Friends visiting the Banks of the Yarrow under his guidance, immediately before his departure from Abbotsford, for Naples.

The title Yarrow Revisited will stand in no need of explanation, for Readers acquainted with the Author's previous poems suggested by that celebrated Stream.]

THE gallant Youth, who may have gained,
Or seeks, a "winsome Marrow,"
Was but an Infant in the lap
When first I looked on Yarrow;

Once more, by Newark's Castle-gate
 Long left without a warder,
 I stood, looked, listened, and with Thee,
 Great Minstrel of the Border !*

Grave thoughts ruled wide on that sweet day,
 Their dignity installing
 In gentle bosoms, while sere leaves
 Were on the bough, or falling ;
 But breezes played, and sunshine gleamed—
 The forest to embolden ;
 Reddened the fiery hues, and shot
 Transparence through the golden.

For busy thoughts the Stream flowed on
 In foamy agitation ;
 And slept in many a crystal pool
 For quiet contemplation : †
 No public and no private care
 The free-born mind enthraling,
 We made a day of happy hours,
 Our happy days recalling.

Brisk Youth appeared, the Morn of youth,
 With freaks of graceful folly,—
 Life's temperate Noon, her sober Eve,
 Her Night not melancholy ;

---

* Wordsworth arrived at Abbotford with his daughter to say farewell to Scott on the 21st September 1831. "On the 22nd," says Mr Lockhart, "these two great poets, who had through life loved each other well, and in spite of very different theories as to art, appreciated each other's genius more justly than infirm spirits ever did either of them, spent the morning together in a visit to Newark. Hence the last of the three poems by which Wordsworth has connected his name to all time with the most romantic of Scottish streams."—Memoirs of the Life of Sir Walter Scott, Vol. X., ch. 80, p. 104.

 Did meet us with unaltered face,
 Though we were changed and changing ;
 If, then, some natural shadows spread
 Our inward prospect over,
 The soul's deep valley was not slow
 Its brightness to recover.

Eternal blessings on the Muse,

For Thou, upon a hundred streams,
 By tales of love and sorrow,
 Of faithful love, undaunted truth,
 Hast shed the power of Yarrow ;
 And streams unknown, hills yet unseen,
 Wherever they<sup>1</sup> invite Thee,
 At parent Nature's grateful call,
 With gladness must requite Thee.

A gracious welcome shall be thine,
 Such looks of love and honour
 As thy own Yarrow gave to me
 When first I gazed upon her ;
 Beheld what I had feared to see,
 Unwilling to surrender
 Dreams treasured up from early days,

Yea, what were mighty Nature's self ?
 Her features, could they win us,
 Unhelped by the poetic voice
 That hourly speaks within us ?

Nor deem that localised Romance
 Plays false with our affections ;
 Unsanctifies our tears—made sport
 For fanciful dejections :
 Ah, no ! the visions of the past
 Sustain the heart in feeling
 Life as she is—our changeful Life,
 With friends and kindred dealing.

Bear witness, Ye, whose thoughts that day
 In Yarrow's groves were centered ;
 Who through the silent portal arch
 Of mouldering Newark enter'd ;
 And clomb the winding stair that once
 Too timidly was mounted
 By the "last Minstrel," (not the last !)
 Ere he his Tale recounted.

Flow on for ever, Yarrow Stream !
 Fulfil thy pensive duty,
 Well pleased that future Bards should chant
 For simple hearts thy beauty ;
 To dream-light dear while yet unseen,
 Dear to the common sunshine,
 And dearer still, as now I feel,
 To memory's shadowy moonshine !

ON THE DEPARTURE OF SIR WALTER SCOTT
FROM ABBOTSFORD, FOR NAPLES.*

A TROUBLE, not of clouds, or weeping rain,
Nor of the setting sun's pathetic light
Engendered, hangs o'er Eildon's triple height :
Spirits of Power, assembled there, complain
For kindred Power departing from their sight ;
While Tweed, best pleased in chanting a blithe strain,
Saddens his voice again, and yet again.
Lift up your hearts, ye Mourners ! for the might
Of the whole world's good wishes with him goes ;
Blessings and prayers, in nobler retinue
Than sceptred king or laurelled conqueror knows,
Follows this wondrous Potentate. Be true,
Ye winds of ocean, and the midland sea,
Wafting your Charge to soft Parthenope !

With the closing lines of this sonnet addressed to the "winds of ocean," and Sir Walter's departure for Naples, compare Horace's Ode to the ship carrying Virgil to Athens, (Ode I. 3).—Ed.

A PLACE OF BURIAL IN THE SOUTH OF SCOTLAND.

[Similar places for burial are not unfrequent in Scotland. The one that suggested this Sonnet lies on the banks of a small stream called the Wauchope that flows into the Esk near Langholme. Mickle, who, as it appears from his poem on Sir Martin, was not without genuine

* This sonnet was sent to Alaric Watts for his Souvenir in 1832. Wordsworth wrote, "I enclose a sonnet for your next volume if you choose to insert it. It would have appeared with more advantage in this year's, but was not written in time. It is proper that I should mention it has been sent to Sir Walter Scott, and one or two of my other friends."—(See Alaric Watts, a Narrative of his Life, Vol. II. p. 190.)—Ed.

poetic feelings, was born and passed his boyhood, in this neighbourhood, under his father who was a minister of the Scotch Kirk. The Esk, both above and below Langholme, flows through a beautiful country, and the two streams of the Wauchope and the Ewes, which join it near that place, are such as a pastoral poet would delight in.]

PART fenced by man, part by a rugged steep
 That curbs a foaming brook, a Grave-yard lies ;
 The hare's best couching-place for fearless sleep ;
 Which moonlit elves, far seen by credulous eyes,
 Enter in dance. Of church, or sabbath ties,
 No vestige now remains ; yet thither creep
 Bereft Ones, and in lowly anguish weep
 Their prayers out to the wind and naked skies.
 Proud tomb is none ; but rudely-sculptured knights,
 By humble choice of plain old times, are seen
 Level with earth, among the hillocks green :
 Union not sad, when sunny daybreak smites
 The spangled turf, and neighbouring thickets ring
 With jubilate from the choirs of spring !

IV.

ON THE SIGHT OF A MANSE IN THE SOUTH
OF SCOTLAND.

[The Manses in Scotland and the gardens and grounds about them have seldom that attractive appearance which is common about our English parsonages, even when the clergyman's income falls below the average of the Scotch minister's. This is not merely owing to the one country being poor in comparison with the other, but arises rather out of the equality of their benefices, so that no one has enough to spare for decorations that might serve as an example for others ; whereas, with us, the taste of the richer incumbent extends its influence more or less to the poorest. After all, in these observations the surface only of the matter is touched. I once heard a conversation in which the Roman Catholic Religion was decried on account of its abuses. "You cannot deny, however," said a lady of the party, repeating an expression used by Charles 2nd, "that it is the religion of a gentleman." It may be left to the Scotch themselves to determine how far this observation applies to their Kirk, while it cannot be denied, if it is wanting in that characteristic quality, the aspect of common life, so far as concerns its beauty, must suffer. Sincere christian piety may be thought not to stand in need of refinement or studied ornament ; but assuredly it is ever ready to adopt them, when they fall within its notice, as means allow ; and this observation applies not only to manners, but to everything a christian (truly so in spirit) cultivates and gathers round him, however humble his social condition.]

SAY, ye far-travelled clouds, far-seeing hills—
 Among the happiest-looking homes of men
 Scattered all Britain over, through deep glen,
 On airy upland, and by forest rills,
 And o'er wide plains cheered by the lark that trills
 His sky-born warblings<sup>1</sup>—does aught meet your ken
 More fit to animate the Poet's pen,
 Aught that more surely by its aspect fills
 Pure minds with sinless envy, than the Abode
 Of the good Priest ? who, faithful through all hours
 To his high charge, and truly serving God,
 Has yet a heart and hand for trees and flowers,
 Enjoys the walks his predecessors trod,
 Nor covets lineal rights in lands and towers.

COMPOSED IN ROSLIN CHAPEL, DURING A STORM.

[We were detained by incessant rain and storm at the small inn near Roslin Chapel, and I passed a great part of the day pacing to and fro in this beautiful structure, which, though not used for public service, is not allowed to go to ruin. Here, this Sonnet was composed. If it has at all done justice to the feeling which the place and the storm raging without inspired, I was as a prisoner. A painter delineating the interior of the chapel and its minute features under such circumstances would have, no doubt, found his time agreeably shortened. But the movements of the mind must be more free while dealing with words than with lines and colours; such at least was then and has been on many other occasions my belief, and, as it is allotted to few to follow both arts with success, I am grateful to my own calling for this and a thousand other recommendations which are denied to that of the painter.]

THE wind is now thy organist ;—a clank
 (We know not whence) ministers for a bell
 To mark some change of service. As the swell
 Of music reached its height, and even when sank
 The notes, in prelude, ROSLIN ! to a blank
 Of silence, how it thrilled thy sumptuous roof,
 Pillars, and arches,—not in vain time-proof,
 Though Christian rites be wanting! From what bank
 Came those live herbs? by what hand were they sown
 Where dew falls not, where rain-drops seem unknown?
 Yet in the Temple they a friendly niche
 Share with their sculptured fellows, that, green-grown,
 Copy their beauty more and more, and preach,
 Though mute, of all things blending into one.*

THE TROSSACHS.

[As recorded in my sister's Journal, I had first seen the Trossachs in her and Coleridge's company. The sentiment that runs through this Sonnet was natural to the season in which I again saw this beautiful spot; but this and some other sonnets that follow were coloured by the remembrance of my recent visit to Sir Walter Scott, and the melancholy errand on which he was going.]

“PEOPLE! your chains are severing link by link;
 Soon shall the Rich be levelled down—the Poor
 Meet them half-way.” Vain boast! for These, the more
 They thus would rise, must low and lower sink
 Till, by repentance stung, they fear to think;
 While all lie prostrate, save the tyrant few
 Bent in quick turns each other to undo,
 And mix the poison they themselves must drink.
 Mistrust thyself, vain Country! cease to cry,
 “ Knowledge will save me from the threatened woe.”
 For, if than other rash ones more thou know,
 Yet on presumptuous wing as far would fly
 Above thy knowledge as they dared to go,
 Thou wilt provoke a heavier penalty.

COMPOSED IN THE GLEN OF LOCH ETIVE.

[“ That make the Patriot spirit.” It was mortifying to have frequent occasions to observe the bitter hatred of the lower orders of the Highlanders to their superiors; love of country seemed to have passed into its opposite. Emigration was the only relief looked to with hope.]†

* This Sonnet ought to have followed No. VII. in the series of 1831, but was omitted by mistake. W.W., 1835.

As the above note indicates Wordsworth's own wish as to where the Sonnet should be placed, and approximately gives the date of composition, it is placed as No. VIII. in the Sonnets of 1831. In later editions, Wordsworth placed it as the first in the series of sonnets dedicated to Liberty and Order.—ED.

† This Fenwick note is significant. These things repeat themselves, and are as true in 1885, as they were in 1831.—ED.

"THIS Land of Rainbows spanning glens whose walls,
 Rock-built, are hung with rainbow-coloured mists—
 Of far-stretched Meres whose salt flood never rests—
 Of tuneful Caves and playful Waterfalls—
 Of Mountains varying momentarily their crests—
 Proud be this Land! whose poorest huts are halls
 Where Fancy entertains becoming guests;
 While native song the heroic Past recalls."
 Thus, in the net of her own wishes caught,
 The Muse exclaimed; but Story now must hide
 Her trophies, Fancy crouch; the course of pride
 Has been diverted, other lessons taught,
 That make the Patriot-spirit bow her head
 Where the all-conquering Roman feared to tread.

EAGLES.

COMPOSED AT DUNOLLIE CASTLE IN THE BAY OF OBAN.

["The last I saw was on the wing," off the promontory of Fairhead, county of Antrim. I mention this because, though my tour in Ireland with Mr Marshall and his son was made many years ago, this allusion to the eagle is the only image supplied by it to the poetry I have since written. We travelled through that country in October, and to the shortness of the days and the speed with which we travelled (in a carriage and four) may be ascribed this want of notices, in my verse, of a country so interesting. The deficiency I am somewhat ashamed of,
 and it is the more remarkable as contrasted with my Scotch and Continental tours, of which are to be found in these volumes so many memorials.]

DISHONOURED Rock and Ruin! that, by law
 Tyrannic, keep the Bird of Jove embarred
 Like a lone criminal whose life is spared.
 Vexed is he, and screams loud. The last I saw
 Was on the wing; stooping, he struck with awe
 Man, bird, and beast; then, with a consort paired,

From a bold headland, their loved aery's guard,
 Flew high above Atlantic waves, to draw
 Light from the fountain of the setting sun.
 Such was this Prisoner once ; and, when his plumes
 The sea-blast ruffles as the storm comes on,
 Then, for a moment, he, in spirit, resumes <sup>1</sup>
 His rank 'mong freeborn creatures that live free,
 His power, his beauty, and his majesty.

IN THE SOUND OF MULL.

[Touring late in the season in Scotland is an uncertain speculation. We were detained a week by rain at Bunaw on Loch Etive in a vain hope that the weather would clear up and allow me to show my daughter the beauties of Glencoe. Two days we were at the Isle of Mull, on a visit to Major Campbell ; but it rained incessantly, and we were obliged to give up our intention of going to Staffa. The rain pursued us to Tyndrum, where the Twelfth Sonnet was composed in a storm.]

 What crimes from hate, or desperate love, have sprung ;
 From honour misconceived, or fancied wrong,
 What feuds, not quenched but fed by mutual woe.

HIGHLAND HUT.

SEE what gay wild flowers deck this earth-built Cot,
 Whose smoke, forth-issuing whence and how it may,
 Shines in the greeting of the sun's first ray
 Like wreaths of vapour without stain or blot.
 The limpid mountain rill avoids it not ;
 And why shouldst thou ?—If rightly trained and bred,
 Humanity is humble, finds no spot
 Which her Heaven-guided feet refuse to tread.
 The walls are cracked, sunk is the flowery roof,
 Undressed the pathway leading to the door ;
 But love, as Nature loves, the lonely Poor ;
 Search, for their worth, some gentle heart wrong-proof,
 Meek, patient, kind, and, were its trials fewer,
 Belike less happy.—Stand no more aloof ! *

* This Sonnet describes the exterior of a Highland hut, as often seen under morning or evening sunshine. To the authoress of the "Address to the Wind," and other poems, in this volume, who was my fellow-traveller in this tour, I am indebted for the following extract from her journal, which accurately describes, under particular circumstances, the beautiful appearance of the interior of one of these rude habitations.

"On our return from the Trossachs the evening began to darken, and it rained so heavily that we were completely wet before we had come two miles, and it was dark when we landed with our boatman, at his hut upon the banks of Loch Katrine. I was faint from cold: the good woman had provided, according to her promise, a better fire than we had found in the morning; and, indeed, when I sat down in the chimney-corner of her smoky biggin, I thought I had never felt more comfortable in my life; a pan of coffee was boiling for us, and, having put our clothes in the way of drying, we all sat down thankful for a shelter. We could not prevail upon our boatman, the master of the house, to draw near the fire, though he was cold and wet, or to suffer his wife to get him dry clothes till she had served us, which she did most willingly, though not very expeditiously.

"A Cumberland man of the same rank would not have had such a notion of what was fit and right in his own house, or, if he had, one would have accused him of servility; but in the Highlander it only seemed like politeness (however erroneous and painful to us), naturally growing out of the

THE BROWNIE.

Upon a small island not far from the head of Loch Lomond, are some remains of an ancient building, which was for several years the abode of a solitary Individual, one of the last survivors of the clan of Macfarlane, once powerful in that neighbourhood. Passing along the shore opposite this island in the year 1814, the Author learned these particulars, and that this person then living there had acquired the appellation of 'The Brownie.' See "The Brownie's Cell" (Vol. VI., p. 24), to which the following is a sequel.

"How disappeared he?" Ask the newt and toad;
 Ask of his fellow men, and they will tell
 How he was found, cold as an icicle,

dependence of the inferiors of the clan upon their laird; he did not, however, refuse to let his wife bring out the whisky bottle for his refreshment, at our request. 'She keeps a dram,' as the phrase is: indeed, I believe there is scarcely a lonely house by the wayside, in Scotland, where travellers may not be accommodated with a dram. We asked for sugar, butter, barley-bread, and milk; and, with a smile and a stare more of kindness than wonder, she replied, 'Ye'll get that,' bringing each article separately. We caroused our cups of coffee, laughing like children at the strange atmosphere in which we were: the smoke came in gusts, and spread along the walls; and above our heads in the chimney (where the hens were roosting) it appeared like clouds in the sky. We laughed and laughed again, in spite of the smarting of our eyes, yet had a quieter pleasure in observing the beauty of the beams and rafters gleaming between the clouds of smoke: they had been crusted over, and varnished by many winters, till, where the firelight fell upon them, they had become as glossy as black rocks, on a sunny day, cased in ice. When we had eaten our supper we sat about half an hour, and I think I never felt so deeply the blessing of a hospitable welcome and a warm fire. The man of the house repeated from time that we should often tell of this night when we got to our homes, and interposed praises of his own lake, which he had more than once, when we were returning in the boat, ventured to say was 'bonnier than Loch Lomond.' Our companion from the Trossachs, who, it appeared, was an Edinburgh drawing-master going, during the vacation, on a pedestrian tour to John o'Groat's house, was to sleep in the barn with my fellow-travellers, where the man said he had plenty of dry hay. I do not believe that the hay of the Highlands is ever very dry, but this year it had a better chance than usual : wet or dry, however, the next morning they said they had slept comfortably. When I went to bed, the mistress, desiring me to 'go ben,' attended me with a candle, and assured me that the bed was dry, though not 'sic as I had been used to.' It was of chaff ; there were two others in the room, a cupboard and two chests, upon one of which stood milk in wooden vessels, covered over. The walls of the house were of stone unplastered : it consisted of three apartments, the cowhouse at one end, the kitchen or house in the middle, and the spence at the other end ; the rooms were divided, not up to the rigging, but only to the beginning of the roof, so that there was a free passage for light and smoke from one end of the house to the other. I went to bed some time before the rest of the family ; the door was shut between us, and they had a bright fire, which I could not see, but the light it sent up amongst the varnished rafters and beams, which crossed each other in almost as intricate and fantastic a manner as I have seen the under-boughs of a large beech tree withered by the depth of shade above, produced the most beautiful effect that can be conceived. It was like what I should suppose an underground cave or temple to be, with a dripping or moist roof, and the moonlight entering in upon it by some means or other ; and yet the colours were more like those of melted gems. I lay looking up till the light of the fire faded away, and the man and his wife and child had crept into their bed at the other end of the room : I did not sleep much, but passed a comfortable night ; for my bed, though hard, was warm and clean : the unusualness of my situation prevented me from sleeping. I could hear the waves beat against the shore of the lake : a little rill close to the door made a much louder noise, and, when I sat up in my bed, I could see the lake through an open window-place at the bed's head. Add to this, it rained all night. I was less occupied by remembrance of the Trosachs, beautiful as they were, than the vision of the Highland hut, which I could not get out of my head ; I thought of the Faery-land of Spenser, and what I had read in romance at other times ; and then what a feast it would be for a London Pantomime-maker could he but transplant it to Drury-lane, with all its beautiful colours !"—MS.—W. we came up to it, I was hurt to see that flower-borders had taken place of the natural overgrowings of the ruin, the scattered stones, and wild plants. It is a large and grand pile of red free-stone, harmonising perfectly with the rocks of the river, from which, no doubt, it has been hewn. When I was a little accustomed to the unnaturalness of a modern garden, I could not help admiring the excessive beauty and luxuriance of some of the plants, particularly the purple-flowered clematis, and a broad-leaved creeping plant without flowers which scrambled up the castle wall, along with the ivy, and spread its vine-like branches so lavishly that it seemed to be in its natural situation, and one could not help thinking that, though not self-planted among the ruins of this country, it must somewhere have its native abode in such places. If Bothwell Castle had not been close to the Douglas mansion, we should have been disgusted with the possessor's miserable conception of adorning such a venerable ruin ; but it is so very near to the house, that of necessity the pleasure-grounds must have extended beyond it, and perhaps the neatness of a shaven lawn and the complete desolation natural to a ruin might have made an unpleasing contrast ; and, besides being within the precincts of the pleasure-grounds, and so very near to the dwelling of a noble family, it has forfeited, in some degree, its independent majesty, and becomes a tributary to the mansion : its solitude being interrupted, it has no longer the command over the mind in sending it back into past times, or excluding the ordinary feelings which we bear about us in daily life. We had then only to regret that the castle and the house were so near to each other ; and it was impossible not to regret it ; for the ruin presides in state over the river, far from city or town, as if it might have a peculiar privilege to preserve its memorials of past ages, and maintain its own character for centuries to come. We sat upon a bench under the high trees, and had beautiful views of the different reaches of the river, above and below. On the opposite bank, which is finely wooded with elms and other trees, are the remains of a priory built upon a rock ; and rock and ruin are so blended, that it is impossible to separate the one from the other. Nothing can be more beautiful than the little remnant of this holy place : elm trees (for we were near enough to distinguish them by their branches) grow out of the walls, and overshadow a small, but very elegant window. It can scarcely be conceived what a grace the castle and priory impart to each other ; and the river Clyde flows on, smooth and unruffled below, seeming to my thoughts more in harmony with the sober and stately images of former times, than if it had roared over a rocky channel, forcing its sound upon the ear. It blended gently with the warbling of the smaller birds, and the chattering of the larger ones, that had made their nests in the ruins. In this fortress the chief of the English nobility were confined after the battle of Bannockburn. If a man is to be a prisoner, he scarcely could have a more pleasant place to solace his captivity ; but I thought that, for close confinement, I should prefer the banks of a lake, or the seaside. The greatest charm of a brook or river is in the liberty to pursue it through its windings : you can then take it in whatever mood you like ; silent or noisy, sportive or quiet. The beauties of a brook or river must be sought, and the pleasure is in going in search of them ; those of a lake or of the sea come to you of themselves. These rude warriors cared little, perhaps, about either ; and yet, if one may judge from the writings of Chaucer, and from the old romances, more interesting passions were connected with natural objects in the days of chivalry than now ; though going in search of scenery, as it is called, had not then been thought of. I had previously heard nothing of Bothwell Castle, at least nothing that I remembered ; therefore, perhaps, my pleasure was greater, compared with what I received elsewhere, than others might feel." *MS. Yawning . . . . . 1835.

Henry Crabbe Robinson gives an account of this picture in his Diary, &c. (Vol. II., pp. 214-15):—

“On September the 29th, from Lanark I visited the Duke of Hamilton’s palace, and had unusual pleasure in the paintings to be seen there. I venture to copy my remarks on the famous Rubens’ ‘Daniel in the Lions’ Den :’—‘The variety of character in the lions is admirable. Here is indignation at the unintelligible power which restrains them; there reverence towards the being whom they dare not touch. One of them is consoled by the contemplation of the last skull he has been picking; one is anticipating his next meal; two are debating the subject together. But the Prophet, with a face resembling Curran’s (foreshortened so as to lose its best expression), has all the muscles of his countenance strained from extreme terror. He is without joy or hope; and though his doom is postponed, he has no faith in the miracle which is to reward his integrity. It is a painting rather to astonish than delight.’ Daniel’s head is thrown back, and he looks upwards with an earnest expression and clasped hands, as if vehemently supplicating. The picture formerly belonged to King Charles I. It was at that time entered as follows in the Catalogue of the Royal Pictures :—‘A piece of Daniel in the Lions’ Den with lions about him, given by the deceased Lord Dorchester to the king, being so big as the life. Done by Sir Peter Paul Rubens.’ Dr Waagen very justly observes that, upon the whole, the figure of Daniel is only an accessory employed by the great master to introduce, in the most perfect form, nine figures of lions and lionesses the size of life. Rubens, in a letter to Sir Dudley Carleton, (who presented the picture to the king), dated April 28th, 1618, expressly states that it was wholly his own workmanship. The price was six hundred florins. Engraved in mezzotint by W. Ward, 1789."

This picture subsequently passed into the possession of the Duke of Hamilton, and was sold in 1882 to Mr Denison, Yorkshire. The following is from the catalogue of the Hamilton Palace sale :—

RUBENS—DANIEL IN THE DEN OF LIONS.—The prophet is represented sitting naked in the middle of the den, his hands clasped, and his countenance directed upward with an expression of earnest prayer. Nine lions are prowling around him. Engraved by Blooteling, Van der Leuw, and Lamb, and in mezzotint by J. Ward. There is also an etching of it by Street, extremely rare. This is one of the few great pictures by Reubens which we know with certainty to have been entirely executed by his own hand. Reubens says this explicitly in an Italian letter to Sir Dudley Carleton, which Mr Carpenter has printed in his 'Pictorial Notices,' p. 140. This picture was presented by Sir Dudley Carleton to Charles I., and is inserted in the printed catalogue of his collection at page 87.

"No. 14.

It was sold to Mr Denison for £5145.—Ed.

THE AVON.

(A FEEDER OF THE ANNAN.)

["Yet is it one that other rivulets bear." There is the Shakespeare Avon, the Bristol Avon; the one that flows by Salisbury, and a small river in Wales, I believe, bear the name; Avon being in the ancient tongue the general name for river.]

AVON—a precious, an immortal name !
 Yet is it one that other rivulets bear
 Like this unheard-of, and their channels wear
 Like this contented, though unknown to Fame :
 For great and sacred is the modest claim
 Of Streams to Nature's love, where'er they flow ;
 And ne'er did Genius slight them, as they go,
 Tree, flower, and green herb, feeding without blame.
 But Praise can waste her voice on work of tears,

Anguish, and death : full oft where innocent blood
 Has mixed its current with the limpid flood,
 Her heaven-offending trophies Glory rears :
 Never for like distinction may the good
 Shrink from thy name, pure Rill, with unpleas'd ears.

SUGGESTED BY A VIEW FROM AN EMINENCE
 IN INGLEWOOD FOREST.

[The extensive forest of Inglewood has been enclosed within my memory. I was well acquainted with it in its ancient state. The Hart's-horn tree mentioned in the next Sonnet was one of its remarkable objects, as well as another tree that grew upon an eminence not far from Penrith : it was single and conspicuous ; and being of a round shape, though it was universally known to be a Sycamore, it was always called the "Round Thorn," so difficult is it to chain fancy down to fact.]

THE forest huge of ancient Caledon
 Is but a name, no <sup>1</sup> more is Inglewood,
 That swept from hill to hill, from flood to flood :
 On her last thorn the nightly moon has shone ;
 Yet still, though unappropriate Wild be none,
 Fair parks spread wide where Adam Bell might deign
 With Clym o' the Clough, were they alive again,
 To kill for merry feast their venison.
 Nor wants the holy Abbot's gliding Shade
 His church with monumental wreck bestrown ;
 The feudal Warrior-chief, a Ghost unlaid,
 Hath still his castle, though a skeleton,
 That he may watch by night, and lessons con
 Of power that perishes, and rights that fade.

HART'S-HORN TREE, NEAR PENRITH.*

HERE stood an Oak, that long had borne affixed
 To his huge trunk, or, with more subtle art,
 Among its withering topmost branches mixed,
 The palmy antlers of a hunted Hart,
 Whom the Dog Hercules pursued—his part
 Each desperately sustaining, till at last
 Both sank and died, the life-veins of the chased
 And chaser bursting here with one dire smart.
 Mutual the victory, mutual the defeat !
 High was the trophy hung with pitiless pride ;
 Say, rather, with that generous sympathy
 That wants not, even in the rudest breasts, a seat ;
 And, for this feeling's sake let no one chide
 Verse that would guard thy memory. HART'S-HORN TREE ! †

* This tree has perished, but its site is still well known. Compare the note to Roman Antiquities, p. 297.—ED.

† "In the time of the first Robert de Clifford, in the year 1333 or 1334, Edward Baliol king of Scotland came into Westmoreland, and stayed some time with the said Robert at his castles of Appleby, Brougham, and Pendragon. And during that time they ran a stag by a single greyhound out of Whinfell Park, to Redkirk, in Scotland, and back again to this place ; where, being both spent, the stag leaped over the pales, but died on the other side ; and the greyhound, attempting to leap, fell, and died on the contrary side. In memory of this fact the stag's horns were nailed upon a tree just by, and (the dog being named Hercules) this rhythm was made upon them :

‘ Hercules kill'd Hart a greese,
 And Hart a greese kill'd Hercules.’

The tree to this day bears the name of Hart's-horn Tree. The horns in process of time were almost grown over by the growth of the tree, and another pair was put up in their place."—Nicholson and Burns's History of Westmoreland and Cumberland.

The tree has now disappeared, but I well remember its imposing appearance as it stood, in a decayed state, by the side of the high road leading from Penrith to Appleby. This whole neighbourhood abounds in interesting traditions and vestiges of antiquity, viz., Julian's Bower ; Brougham and Penrith Castles ; Penrith Beacon, and the curious remains in Penrith Churchyard ; Arthur's Round Table, and, close by, Maybrough ; the excavation, called the Giant's Cave, on the banks of the Emont ; Long Meg and her Daughters, near Eden, &c., &c.—W. FANCY AND TRADITION.

THE Lovers took within this ancient grove
 Their last embrace ; beside those crystal springs <sup>1</sup>
 The Hermit saw the Angel spread his wings
 For instant flight ; the Sage in yon alcove <sup>2</sup>
 Sat musing ; on that hill the Bard would rove,
 Not mute, where now the linnet only sings :
 Thus everywhere to truth Tradition clings <sup>3</sup>
 Or Fancy localises Powers we love.
 Were only History <sup>4</sup> licensed to take note
 Of things gone by, her meagre monuments
 Would ill suffice for persons and events :
 There is an ampler page for man to quote,
 A readier book of manifold contents,
 Studied alike in palace and in cot.

COUNTESS' PILLAR. *

[Suggested by the recollection of Julian's Bower and other traditions connected with this ancient forest.]

On the roadside between Penrith and Appleby, there stands a pillar with the following inscription :—

WHILE the Poor gather round, till the end of time
 May this bright flower of Charity display
 Its bloom, unfolding at the appointed day;
 Flower than the loveliest of the vernal prime
 Lovelier—transplanted from heaven's purest clime!
 'Charity never faileth:' on that creed,
 More than on written testament or deed,
 The pious Lady built with hope sublime.
 Alms on this stone to be dealt out, for ever!
 "LAUS DEO." Many a Stranger passing by
 Has with that Parting mixed a filial sigh,
 Blest its humane Memorial's fond endeavour:
 And, fastening on those lines an eye tear-glazed,
 Has ended, though no Clerk, with 'God be praised!'

ROMAN ANTIQUITIES.

[FROM THE ROMAN STATION AT OLD PENRITH.]

How profitless the relics that we cull,
 Troubling the last holds of ambitious Rome,
 Unless they chasten fancies that presume
 To high, or idle agitations lull!
 Of the world's flatteries if the brain be full,
 To have no seat for thought were better doom,
 Like this old helmet, or the eyeless skull
 Of him who gloried in its nodding plume.
 Heaven out of view, our wishes what are they?
 Our fond regrets tenacious<sup>1</sup> in their grasp?

The Sage's theory? the Poet's lay?—
 Mere Fibulæ without a robe to clasp;
 Obsolete lamps, whose light no time recalls;
 Urns without ashes, tearless lacrymals!

I am indebted to Dr Taylor of Penrith for the following note in reference to these "Roman Antiquities" at Old Penrith:—"DEAR SIR,—I have great pleasure in giving you what information I can, concerning the Roman Station of Old Penrith. It is called 'Petriana' by Camden, but most archæologists now allocate it in the '2nd Iter,' as the Station 'Voreda'—on the road between York and Carlisle. This road passes over Stanemoor, by Bowes, Brough, Kirkbythore, Brougham, and Plumpton Wall (or Voreda), to Lugovallum or Carlisle. The Roman Camps are visible at all these places, and the old Roman road is recognizable in many parts. This Old Penrith, Plumpton Wall, or Voreda, is a camp of the third class. At a time, probably about the period which Wordsworth alludes to, several Roman stones and altars were dug up at Voreda, and are now deposited in Lowther Castle. Wordsworth had relations living in Penrith, whom he used to visit occasionally, and it is probable that after a visit to Voreda, which is about six miles from here, he wrote the Sonnet alluded to. The 'Hartahorn Tree' referred to in the 'Legend of the Hunt of the Stag' stood in the park of Whinfell, in the parish of Brougham, but has disappeared for many years."—Ed.

 Abrupt—as without preconceived design
 Was the beginning; yet the several Lays

 Its impulse took—that sorrow-stricken door,
 Whence, as a current from its fountain-head,
 Our thoughts have issued, and our feelings flowed,
 Receiving, willingly or not, fresh strength
 From kindred sources ; while around us sighed
 (Life's three first seasons having passed away)
 Leaf-scattering winds ; and hoar-frost sprinklings fell

THE HIGHLAND BROACH.

[On ascending a hill that leads from Loch Awe towards Inverary, I fell into conversation with a woman of the humbler class who wore one of those Highland Broaches. I talked with her about it; and upon parting with her, when I said with a kindness I truly felt—“May that Broach continue in your family through many generations to come, as you have already possessed it”—she thanked me most becomingly and seemed not a little moved.]

The exact resemblance which the old Broach (still in use, though rarely met with, among the Highlanders) bears to the Roman Fibula must strike every one, and concurs, with the plaid and kilt, to recal to mind the communication which the ancient Romans had with this remote country.

If to Tradition faith be due,
 And echoes from old verse speak true,
 Ere the meek Saint, Columba, bore
 Glad tidings to Iona's shore,
 No common light of nature blessed
 The mountain region of the west;
 A land where gentle manners ruled
 O'er men in dauntless virtues schooled,
 That raised, for centuries, a bar
 Impervious to the tide of war:
 Yet peaceful Arts did entrance gain
 Where haughty Force had striven in vain;
 And, 'mid the works of skilful hands,
 By wanderers brought from foreign lands
 And various climes, was not unknown
 The clasp that fixed the Roman Gown;
 The Fibula, whose shape, I ween,
 Still in the Highland Broach is seen,
 The silver Broach of massy frame,
 Worn at the breast of some grave Dame

On road or path, or at the door
 Of fern-thatched hut on heathy moor :
 But delicate of yore its mould,
 And the material finest gold ;
 As might beseem the fairest Fair,
 Whether she graced a royal chair,
 Or shed, within a vaulted hall,
 No fancied lustre on the wall
 Where shields of mighty heroes hung,
 While Fingal heard what Ossian sung.

The heroic Age expired—it slept
 Deep in its tomb :—the bramble crept
 O'er Fingal's hearth ; the grassy sod
 Grew on the floors his soul had trod :
 Malvina ! where art thou ? Their state
 The noblest-born must abdicate ;
 The fairest, while with fire and sword
 Come Spoilers—horde impelling horde,
 Must walk the sorrowing mountains, drest
 By ruder hands in homelier vest.
 Yet still the female bosom lent,
 And loved to borrow, ornament ;
 Still was its inner world a place
 Reached by the dews of heavenly grace ;
 Still pity to this last retreat
 Clove fondly ; to his favourite seat
 Love wound his way by soft approach,
 Beneath a massier Highland Broach.

When alternations came of rage
 Yet fiercer, in a darker age ;
 And feuds, where, clan encountering clan,
 The weaker perished to a man ;

For maid and mother, when despair
 Might else have triumphed, baffling prayer,
 One small possession lacked not power,
 Provided in a calmer hour,
 To meet such need as might befall—
 Roof, raiment, bread, or burial :
 For women, even of tears bereft,
 The hidden silver Broach was left.

As generations come and go
 Their arts, their customs, ebb and flow ;
 Fate, fortune, sweep strong powers away,
 And feeble, of themselves, decay ;
 What poor abodes the heir-loom hide,
 In which the castle once took pride !
 Tokens, once kept as boasted wealth,
 If saved at all, are saved by stealth.
 Lo ! ships, from seas by nature barred,
 Mount along ways by man prepared ;
 And in far-stretching vales, whose streams
 Seek other seas, their canvas gleams.

Lo ! busy towns spring up, on coasts
 Thronged yesterday by airy ghosts ;
 Soon, like a lingering star forlorn
 Among the novelties of morn,
 While young delights on old encroach,
 Will vanish the last Highland Broach.

But when, from out their viewless bed,
 Like vapours, years have rolled and spread,
 And this poor verse, and worthier lays,
 Shall yield no light of love or praise ;

Then, by the spade, or cleaving plough,
 Or torrent from the mountain's brow,
 Or whirlwind, reckless what his might
 Entombs, or forces into light ;
 Blind Chance, a volunteer ally,
 That oft befriends Antiquity,
 And clears Oblivion from reproach,
 May render back the Highland Broach.*

DEVOTIONAL INCITEMENTS.

Comp. 1832. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount.]

'Not to the earth confined,
 Ascend to heaven.'

WHERE will they stop, those breathing Powers,
 The Spirits of the new-born flowers ?
 They wander with the breeze, they wind
 Where'er the streams a passage find ;
 Up from their native ground they rise
 In mute aërial harmonies ;
 From humble violet—modest thyme—
 Exhaled, the essential odours climb,

---

* How much the Broach is sometimes prized by persons in humble stations may be gathered from an occurrence mentioned to me by a female friend. She had had an opportunity of benefiting a poor old woman in her own hut, who, wishing to make a return, said to her daughter, in Erse, in a tone of plaintive earnestness, "I would give anything I have, but I hope she does not wish for my Broach !" and, uttering these words, she put her hand upon the Broach which fastened her kerchief, and which, she imagined, had attracted the eye of her benefactress.—W. W., 1835.

As if no space below the sky
 Their subtle flight could satisfy :
 Heaven will not tax our thoughts with pride
 If like ambition be their guide.

Roused by this kindest of May-showers,
 The spirit-quickener of the flowers,
 That with moist virtue softly cleaves
 The buds, and freshens the young leaves,
 The birds pour forth their souls in notes
 Of rapture from a thousand throats—
 Here checked by too impetuous haste,
 While there the music runs to waste,
 With bounty more and more enlarged,
 Till the whole air is overcharged ;
 Give ear, O Man ! to their appeal
 And thirst for no inferior zeal,
 Thou, who canst think, as well as feel.

Mount from the earth ; aspire ! aspire !
 So pleads the town's cathedral quire,
 In strains that from their solemn height
 Sink, to attain a loftier flight ;
 While incense from the altar breathes
 Rich fragrance in embodied wreaths ;
 Or, flung from swinging censer, shrouds
 The taper-lights, and curls in clouds
 Around angelic Forms, the still
 Creation of the painter's skill,
 That on the service wait concealed
 One moment, and the next revealed.
 —Cast off your bonds, awake, arise,
 And for no transient ecstasies !

What else can mean the visual plea
 Of still or moving imagery—
 The iterated summons loud,
 Not wasted on the attendant crowd,
 Nor wholly lost upon the throng
 Hurrying the busy streets along ?

Alas ! the sanctities combined
 By art to unsensualise the mind
 Decay and languish ; or, as creeds
 And humours change, are spurned like weeds :
 The priests are from their altars thrust ;
 Temples are levelled with the dust ;
 And solemn rites and awful forms
 Founder amid fanatic storms.<sup>1</sup>
 Yet evermore, through years renewed
 In undisturbed vicissitude
 Of seasons balancing their flight
 On the swift wings of day and night,
 Kind Nature keeps a heavenly door
 Wide open for the scattered Poor.
 Where flower-breathed incense to the skies
 Is wafted in mute harmonies ;
 And ground fresh-cloven by the plough
 Is fragrant with a humbler vow ;
 Where birds and brooks from leafy dells
 Chime forth unwearied canticles,
 And vapours magnify and spread
 The glory of the sun's bright head—

Still constant in her worship, still
 Conforming to the eternal Will,<sup>1</sup>
 Whether men sow or reap the fields,
 Divine monition <sup>2</sup> Nature yields,
 That not by bread alone we live,
 Or what a hand of flesh can give;
 That every day should leave some part
 Free for a sabbath of the heart:
 So shall the seventh be truly blest,
 From morn to eve, with hallowed rest.

Comp. 1832. — Pub. 1835.

CALM is the fragrant air, and loth to lose
 Day's grateful warmth, tho' moist with falling dews.
 Look for the stars, you'll say that there are none;
 Look up a second time, and, one by one,
 You mark them twinkling out with silvery light,
 And wonder how they could elude the sight!
 The birds, of late so noisy in their bowers,
 Warbled a while with faint and fainter powers,
 But now are silent as the dim-seen flowers:
 Nor does the village Church-clock's iron tone
 The time's and season's influence disown:
 Nine beats distinctly to each other bound
 In drowsy sequence—how unlike the sound
 That, in rough winter, oft inflicts a fear
 On fireside listeners, doubting what they hear!

The shepherd, bent on rising with the sun,
 Had closed his door before the day was done.
 And now with thankful heart to bed doth creep,
 And joins<sup>1</sup> his little children in their sleep.
 The bat, lured forth where trees the lane o'ershade,
 Flits and refits along the close arcade ;
 The busy<sup>2</sup> dor-hawk chases the white moth
 With burring note, which Industry and Sloth
 Might both be pleased with, for it suits them both.
 A stream is heard—I see it not, but know
 By its soft music whence the waters flow :
 Wheels<sup>3</sup> and the tread of hoofs are heard no more ;
 One boat there was, but it will touch the shore
 With the next dipping of its slackened oar ;
 Faint sound, that, for the gayest of the gay,
 Might give to serious thought a moment's sway,
 As a last token of man's toilsome day !

Transient deception! a gay freak
 Of April's mimicries!
 Those brilliant strangers, hailed with joy
 Among the budding trees,
 Proved last year's leaves, pushed from the spray
 To frolic on the breeze.

Maternal Flora! show thy face,
 And let thy hand be seen,
 Thy hand here sprinkling tiny flowers,<sup>1</sup>
 That, as they touch the green,
 Take root (so seems it) and look up
 In honour of their Queen.
 Yet, sooth, those little starry specks,
 That not in vain aspired
 To be confounded with live growths,
 Most dainty, most admired,
 Were only blossoms dropped from twigs
 Of their own offspring tired.

Not such the World's illusive shows;
 Her wingless flutterings,
 Her blossoms which, though shed, outbrave
 The floweret as it springs,
 For the undeceived, smile as they may,
 Are melancholy things:
 But gentle Nature plays her part
 With ever-varying wiles,
 And transient feignings with plain truth
 So well she reconciles,
 That those fond Idlers most are pleased
 Whom oftenest she beguiles.

LOVING AND LIKING.

IRREGULAR VERSES,
 ADDRESSED TO A CHILD.
 (BY MY SISTER.)<sup>1</sup>

Comp. 1832. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount. It arose, I believe, out of a casual expression of one of Mr Swinburne's children.]

THERE'S more in words than I can teach :
 Yet listen, Child !—I would not preach ;
 But only give some plain directions
 To guide your speech and your affections.
 Say not you love a roasted fowl,
 But you may love a screaming owl,
 And, if you can, the unwieldy toad
 That crawls from his secure abode
 Within the mossy garden wall
 When evening dews begin to fall.
 Oh mark the beauty of his eye :
 What wonders in that circle lie !
 So clear, so bright, our fathers said
 He wears a jewel in his head !
 And when, upon some showery day,
 Into a path or public way
 A frog leaps out from bordering grass,
 Startling the timid as they pass,
 Do you observe him, and endeavour
 To take the intruder into favour ;

<sup>1</sup> 1845.

In the former editions of the Author's Miscellaneous Poems are three pieces addressed to children :—the following, a few lines excepted, is by the same Writer ; and, as it belongs to the same unassuming class of compositions, she has been prevailed upon to consent to its publication. 1835.

By the author of the Poem, "Address to a child, during a boisterous winter evening." 1836.

Learning from him to find a reason
 For a light heart in a dull season.
 And you may love him in the pool,
 That is for him a happy school,
 In which he swims as taught by nature,
 Fit<sup>1</sup> pattern for a human creature,
 Glancing amid the water bright,
 And sending upward sparkling light.

Nor blush if o'er your heart be stealing
 A love for things that have no feeling :
 'The spring's first rose by you espied
 May fill your breast with joyful pride ;
 And you may love the strawberry-flower,
 And love the strawberry in its bower ;
 But when the fruit, so often praised
 For beauty, to your lip is raised,
 Say not you love the delicate treat,
 But like it, enjoy it, and thankfully eat.

Long may you love your pensioner mouse,
 Though one of a tribe that torment the house.
 Nor dislike for her cruel sport the cat,
 Deadly foe both of<sup>2</sup> mouse and rat ;
 Remember she follows the law of her kind,
 And Instinct is neither wayward nor blind.
 Then think of her beautiful gliding form,
 Her tread that would scarcely<sup>3</sup> crush a worm

And her soothing song by the winter fire,
Soft as the dying throb of the lyre.

I would not circumscribe your love :
It may soar with the eagle and brood with the dove,
May pierce the earth with the patient mole,
Or track the hedgehog to his hole.
Loving and liking are the solace of life,
Rock the cradle of joy, smooth the death-bed of strife.<sup>1</sup>
You love your father and your mother,
Your grown-up and your baby-brother ;
You love your sister, and your friends,
And countless blessings which God sends :
And while these right affections play,
You live each moment of your day ;
They lead you on to full content,
And likings fresh and innocent,
That store the mind, the memory feed,
And prompt to many a gentle deed :
But likings come, and pass away ;
'Tis love that remains till our latest day :
Our heavenward guide is holy love,
And will<sup>2</sup> be our bliss with saints above.

 As with once voice; their flinty heart grew soft
 With penitential sorrow, and aloft
 Their spirit mounted, crying, "God us aid!
 Oh that with aspirations more intense,
 Chastised by self-abasement more profound,
 This People, once<sup>2</sup> so happy, so renowned
 For liberty, would seek from God defence
 Against far heavier ill, the pestilence*
 Of revolution, impiously unbound!

Comp. 1832. — Pub. 1832.

[This was also communicated to me by a coachman in the same way in the course of my many coach rambles and journeys, which, during the day-time always, and often in the night, were taken on the outside of the coach, I had good and frequent opportunities of learning the characteristics of this class of men. One remark I made that is worth recording; that whenever I had occasion especially to notice their well-ordered, respectful and kind behaviour to women, of whatever age,
 I found them, I may say almost always, to be married men.]

Yes, Traveller! fifty winters have been told
 Since suddenly the dart of death went forth
 'Gainst him who raised it,—his last work on earth :
 Thence has it, with the Son, so strong a hold
 Upon his Father's memory, that his hands,
 Through reverence, touch it only to repair<sup>1</sup>
 Its waste.—Though crumbling with each breath of air,
 In annual renovation thus it stands—
 Rude Mausoleum! but wrens nestle there,
 And red-breasts warble when sweet sounds are rare.

TO B. R. HAYDON, ON SEEING HIS PICTURE OF NAPOLEON BUONAPARTE ON THE ISLAND OF ST HELENA.

Comp. 1832. — Pub. 1832.

[This Sonnet, though said to be written on seeing the Portrait of Napoleon, was, in fact, composed some time after, extempore, in the wood at Rydal Mount.]

HAYDON! let worthier judges praise the skill
 Here by thy pencil shown in truth of lines
 And charm of colours; I applaud those signs
 Of thought, that give the true poetic thrill;
 That unencumbered whole of blank and still
 Sky without cloud—ocean without a wave;
 And the one Man that laboured to enslave
 The World, sole-standing high on the bare hill—
 Back turned, arms folded, the unapparent face
 Tinged, we may fancy, in this dreary place
 With light reflected from the invisible sun
 Set, like his fortunes; but not set for aye

 And before him doth dawn perpetual run.*

Comp. . — Pub. 1832.

[These verses were written some time after we had become residents at Rydal Mount, and I will take occasion from them to observe upon the beauty of that situation, as being backed and flanked by lofty fells, which bring the heavenly bodies to touch, as it were, the earth upon the mountain-tops, while the prospect in front lies open to a length of level valley, the extended lake, and a terminating ridge of low hills; so that it gives an opportunity to the inhabitants of the place of noticing the stars in both the positions here alluded to, namely, on the tops of the mountains, and as winter-lamps at a distance among the leafless trees.]

If thou indeed derive thy light from Heaven,
 Then, to the measure of that heaven-born light,

* Haydon, as he tells us in his Autobiography, received a commission from Sir Robert Peel, in Dec. 1830, "to paint Napoleon musing, the size of life." He finished it in June 1831, and thus described it himself:—

"Napoleon was peculiarly alive to poetical association as produced by scenery or sound; village bells with their echoing ding, dong, dang, now bursting full on the ear, now dying in the wind, affected him as they affect everybody alive to natural impressions, and on the eve of all his great battles you find him stealing away in the dead of the night, between the two hosts, and indulging in every species of poetical reverie. It was impossible to think of such a genius in captivity, without mysterious associations of the sky, the sea, the rock, and the solitude with which he was enveloped. I never imagined him but as if musing at dawn, or melancholy at sunset, listening at midnight to the beating and roaring of the Atlantic, or meditating as the stars gazed and the moon shone on him; in short Napoleon never appeared to me but at those seasons of silence and twilight, when nature seems to sympathise with the fallen, and when if there be moments in this turbulent earth fit for celestial intercourse, one must imagine these would be the times immortal spirits might select to descend within the sphere of mortality, to soothe and comfort, to inspire and support the afflicted.

Under such impressions the present picture was produced. . . . I imagined him standing on the brow of an impending cliff, and musing on his past fortunes, . . . sea-birds screaming at his feet, . . . the sun just down, . . . the sails of his guard ship glittering on the horizon, and the Atlantic, calm, silent, awfully deep, and endlessly extensive."—Life of Benjamin Robert Haydon, Vol. II., pp. 301-2.—Ed.

314 IF THOU INDEED DERIVE THY LIGHT FROM HEAVEN.

Shine, Poet!<sup>1</sup> in thy place, and be content :—
 The stars pre-eminent in magnitude,
 And they that from the zenith dart their beams,<sup>2</sup>
 (Visible though they<sup>3</sup> be to half the earth, Though half a sphere be conscious of their brightness)
 Are<sup>4</sup> yet of no diviner origin,
 No purer essence, than the one that burns,
 Like an untended watch-fire on the ridge
 Of some dark mountain ; or than those which seem
 Humbly to hang, like twinkling winter lamps,
 Among the branches of the leafless trees.
 All are the undying offspring of one Sire :
 Then, to the measure of the light vouchsafed,
 Shine, Poet ! in thy place, and be content.*

These lines were first published in 1832 ; and they found a place in the edition of that year, amongst the “Poems of Sentiment and Reflection.” In the edition of 1845 they appeared as a Preface to the entire volume of Poems.—ED.

1833.

The most important of the poems written in 1833 were the Memorials of the Tour undertaken during the summer of that year. They refer to several Cumbrian localities, to the Isle of Man, to the Clyde, the Western Isles of Scotland, and again to Cumberland.

A WREN'S NEST.

Comp. 1833. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount. This nest was built, as described, in a tree that grows near the pool in Dora's field, next the Rydal Mount garden.*]

AMONG the dwellings framed by birds
 In field or forest with nice care,
 Is none that with the little Wren's
 In snugness may compare.

No door the tenement requires,
 And seldom needs a laboured roof ;
 Yet is it to the fiercest sun
 Impervious, and storm-proof.

So warm, so beautiful withal,
 In perfect fitness for its aim,
 That to the Kind by special grace
 Their instinct surely came.

And when for their abodes they seek
 An opportune recess,
 The hermit has no finer eye
 For shadowy quietness.

---

* Wrens still build (1884) in the same pollard oak tree, which survives in "Dora's Field;" and primroses grow beneath it.—Ed.

These find, 'mid ivied abbey-walls,
A canopy in some still nook ;
Others are pent-housed by a brae
That overhangs a brook.

There to the brooding bird her mate
Warbles by fits his low clear song ;
And by the busy streamlet both
Are sung to all day long.

Or in sequestered lanes they build,
Where, till the fitting bird's return,
Her eggs within the nest repose,
Like relics in an urn.

But still, where general choice is good,
There is a better and a best ;
And, among fairest objects, some
Are fairer than the rest ;

This, one of those small builders proved
In a green covert, where, from out
The forehead of a pollard oak,
The leafy antlers sprout ;

For She who planned the mossy lodge,
Mistrusting her evasive skill,
Had to a Primrose looked for aid
Her wishes to fulfil.

High on the trunk's projecting brow
And fixed an infant's span above
The budding flowers, peeped forth the nest,
The prettiest of the grove !

The treasure proudly did I show
To some whose minds without disdain
Can turn to little things ; but once
Looked up for it in vain :

'Tis gone—a ruthless spoiler's prey,
Who heeds not beauty, love, or song,
'Tis gone ! (so seemed it) and we grieved
Indignant at the wrong.

Just three days after, passing by
In clearer light the moss-built cell
I saw, espied its shaded mouth ;
And felt that all was well.

The Primrose for a veil had spread
The largest of her upright leaves ;
And thus, for purposes benign,
A simple flower deceives.

Concealed from friends who might disturb
Thy quiet with no ill intent,
Secure from evil eyes and hands
On barbarous plunder bent,

Rest, Mother-bird ! and when thy young
Take flight, and thou art free to roam,
When withered is the guardian Flower,
And empty thy late home,

Think how ye prospered, thou and thine,
Amid the unviolated grove
Housed near the growing Primrose-tuft
In foresight, or in love.

TO ———,

UPON THE BIRTH OF HER FIRST-BORN CHILD, MARCH, 1833.

“Tum porro puer, ut sævis projectus ab undis
Navita, nudus humi jacet,” &c.

—LUCRETIVS.

Comp. March 1833. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Moresby near Whitehaven, when I was on a visit to my son, then incumbent of that small living. While I am dictating these notes to my friend, Miss Fenwick, January 24, 1843, the child upon whose birth these verses were written is under my roof, and is of a disposition so promising that the wishes and prayers and prophecies which I then breathed forth in verse are, through God's mercy, likely to be realised.]

LIKE a shipwreck'd Sailor tost
By rough waves on a perilous coast,
Lies the Babe, in helplessness
And in tenderest nakedness,
Flung by labouring nature forth
Upon the mercies of the earth.
Can its eyes beseech?—no more
Than the hands are free to implore:
Voice but serves for one brief cry;
Plaint was it? or prophecy
Of sorrow that will surely come?
Omen of man's grievous doom!

But, O Mother! by the close
Duly granted to thy throes;
By the silent thanks, now tending
Incense-like to Heaven, descending
Now to mingle and to move
With the gush of earthly love,
As a debt to that frail Creature,
Instrument of struggling Nature

For the blissful calm, the peace
Known but to this one release—
Can the pitying spirit doubt
That for human-kind springs out
From the penalty a sense
Of more than mortal recompence ?

As a floating summer cloud,
Though of gorgeous drapery proud,
To the sun-burnt traveller,
Or the stooping labourer,
Oft-times makes its bounty known
By its shadow round him thrown ;
So, by chequerings of sad cheer,
Heavenly Guardians, brooding near,
Of their presence tell—too bright
Haply for corporeal sight !
Ministers of grace divine
Feelingly their brows incline
O'er this seeming Castaway
Breathing, in the light of day,
Something like the faintest breath
That has power to baffle death—
Beautiful, while very weakness
Captivates like passive meekness.

And, sweet Mother ! under warrant
Of the universal Parent,
Who repays in season due
Them who have, like thee, been true
To the filial chain let down
From his everlasting throne,

Angels hovering round thy couch,
 With their softest whispers vouch,
 That—whatever griefs may fret,
 Cares entangle, sins beset,
 This thy First-born, and with tears
 Stain her cheek in future years—
 Heavenly succour, not denied
 To the babe, whate'er betide,
 Will to the woman be supplied !

Mother ! blest be thy calm ease ;
 Blest the starry promises,—
 And the firmament benign
 Hallowed be it, where they shine !
 Yes, for them whose souls have scope
 Ample for a wingèd hope,
 And can earthward bend an ear
 For needful listening, pledge is here,
 That, if thy new-born Charge shall tread
 In thy footsteps, and be led
 By that other Guide, whose light
 Of manly virtues, mildly bright,
 Gave him first the wished-for part
 In thy gentle virgin heart ;
 Then, amid the storms of life
 Presignified by that dread strife
 Whence ye have escaped together,
 She may look for serene weather ;
 In all trials sure to find
 Comfort for a faithful mind ;
 Kindlier issues, holier rest,
 Than even now await her prest,
 Conscious Nursling, to thy breast !

THE WARNING.

A SEQUEL TO THE FOREGOING.

Comp. March 1833. — Pub. 1835.

[These lines were composed during the fever spread through the nation by the Reform Bill. As the motives which led to this measure, and the good or evil which has attended or has risen from it, will be duly appreciated by future historians, there is no call for dwelling on the subject in this place. I will content myself with saying that the then condition of the people's mind is not, in these verses, exaggerated.]

LIST, the winds of March are blowing ;
 Her ground-flowers shrink, afraid of showing
 Their meek heads to the nipping air,
 Which ye feel not, happy pair !
 Sunk into a kindly sleep.
 We, meanwhile, our hope will keep ;
 And if Time leagued with adverse Change
 (Too busy fear !) shall cross its range,
 Whatsoever check they bring,
 Anxious duty hindering,
 To like hope our prayers will cling.

Thus, while the ruminating spirit feeds
 Upon the events of home<sup>1</sup> as life proceeds,
 Affections pure and holy in their source
 Gain a fresh impulse, run a livelier course ;
 Hopes that within the father's heart prevail,
 Are in the experienced Grandsire's slow to fail ;
 And if the harp pleased his gay youth, it rings
 To his grave touch with no unready strings,
 While thoughts press on, and feelings overflow,
 And quick words round him fall like flakes of snow.

Thanks to the Powers that yet maintain their sway,
 And have renewed the tributary Lay.
 Truths of the heart flock in with eager pace,
 And FANCY greets them with a fond embrace ;
 Swift as the rising sun his beams extends
 She shoots the tidings forth to distant friends ;
 Their gifts she hails (deemed precious, as they prove
 For the unconscious Babe so prompt a love !)—<sup>1</sup>
 But from this peaceful centre of delight
 Vague sympathies have urged her to take flight :
 Rapt<sup>2</sup> into upper regions, like the bee
 That sucks from mountain heath her honey fee ;
 Or, like the warbling lark intent to shroud
 His head in sunbeams or a bowery cloud,
 She soars—and here and there her pinions rest
 On proud towers, like this humble cottage, blest
 With a new visitant, an infant guest—
 Towers where red streamers flout the breezy sky
 In pomp foreseen by her creative eye,
 When feasts shall crowd the hall, and steeple bells
 Glad proclamation make, and heights and dells
 Catch the blithe music as it sinks and swells,<sup>3</sup>
 And harboured ships, whose pride is on the sea,
 Shall hoist their topmost flags in sign of glee,
 Honouring the hope of noble ancestry.

<sup>1</sup> 1842. . . . Babe an unbelated love !) 1835.

But who (though neither reckoning ills assigned
 By Nature, nor reviewing in the mind
 The track that was, and is, and must be, worn
 With weary feet by all of woman born)—
 Shall now by such a gift with joy be moved,
 Nor feel the fulness of that joy reproved?
 Not He, whose last faint memory will command
 The truth that Britain was his native land;*
 Whose infant soul was tutored to confide
 In the cleansed faith for which her martyrs died;
 Whose boyish ear the voice of her renown
 With rapture thrilled; whose Youth revered the crown
 Of Saxon liberty that Alfred wore,†
 Alfred, dear Babe, thy great Progenitor!
 —Not He, who from her mellowed practice drew
 His social sense of just, and fair, and true;
 And saw, thereafter, on the soil of France
 Rash Polity begin her maniac dance,‡
 Foundations broken up, the deeps run wild,
 Nor grieved to see (himself not unbeguiled)—
 Woke from the dream, the dreamer to upbraid,
 And learn how sanguine expectations fade
 When novel trusts by folly are betrayed,—
 To see Presumption, turning pale, refrain
 From further havoc, but repent in vain,—
 Good aims lie down, and perish in the road
 Where guilt had urged them on with ceaseless goad,
 Proofs thickening round her that on public ends
 Domestic virtue vitally depends,

Can such a one, dear Babe! though glad and proud
 To welcome thee, repel the fears that crowd
 Into his English breast, and spare to quake
 Less for his own than <sup>2</sup> for thy innocent sake?
 Too late—or, should the Providence of God
 Lead, through dark <sup>3</sup> ways by sin and sorrow trod,
 Justice and peace to a secure abode,
 Too soon—thou com'st into this breathing world;
 Ensigns of mimic outrage are unfurled.
 Who shall preserve or prop the tottering Realm?
 What hand suffice to govern the state-helm?
 If, in the aims of men, the surest test
 Of good or bad (whate'er be sought for or profest)
 Lie in the means required, or ways ordained,
 For compassing the end, else never gained;
 Yet governors and govern'd both are blind
 To this plain truth, or fling it to the wind;
 If to expedience principle must bow;
 Past, future, shrinking up beneath the incumbent Now;
 If cowardly concession still must feed
 The thirst for power in men who ne'er concede;

 Lost above all, ye labouring multitude !
 Bewildered whether ye, by slanderous tongues
 Deceived, mistake calamities for wrongs ;

 Oft snapping at revenge in sullen mood ;
 Or, from long stress of real injuries fly
 To desperation for a remedy ;

—O for a bridle bitted with remorse
 To stop your Leaders in their headstrong course !*
 Oh may the Almighty scatter with his grace
 These mists, and lead you to a safer place,
 By paths no human wisdom can foretrace !
 May He pour round you, from worlds far above
 Man's feverish passions, his pure light of love,
 That quietly restores the natural mien
 To hope, and makes truth willing to be seen !
Else shall your blood-stained hands in frenzy reap
 Fields gaily sown when promises were cheap.—
 Why is the Past belied with wicked art,
 The Future made to play so false a part,
 Among a people famed for strength of mind,
 Foremost in freedom, noblest of mankind ?
 We act as if we joyed in the sad tune
 Storms make in rising, valued in the moon
 Nought but her changes. Thus, ungrateful Nation :
 If thou persist, and, scorning moderation,
 Spread for thyself the snares of tribulation,
 Whom, then, shall meekness guard ? What saving skill
 Lie in forbearance, strength in standing still ?
 —Soon shall the widow (for the speed of Time Nought equals when the hours are winged with crime)
 Widow, or wife, implore on tremulous knee,
 From him who judged her lord, a like decree ;
 The skies will weep o'er old men desolate :
 Ye little-ones ! Earth shudders at your fate,
 Outcasts and homeless orphans——

But turn, my Soul, and from the sleeping pair
 Learn thou the beauty of omniscient care !

ON A HIGH PART OF THE COAST OF CUMBERLAND.

Easter Sunday, April 7.

THE AUTHOR'S SIXTY-THIRD BIRTH-DAY.

Comp. 1833. — Pub. 1835.

[The lines were composed on the road between Moresby and Whitehaven while I was on a visit to my son, then rector of the former place. This succession of Voluntaries, with the exception of the 8th and 9th, originated in the concluding lines of the last paragraph of this poem. With this coast I have been familiar from my earliest childhood, and remember being struck for the first time by the town and port of Whitehaven and the white waves breaking against its quays and piers, as the whole came into view from the top of the high ground down which the road (it has since been altered) then descended abruptly. My sister, when she first heard the voice of the sea from this point, and beheld the scene before her, burst into tears. Our family then lived at Cockermouth, and this fact was often mentioned among us as indicating the sensibility for which she was so remarkable.]

THE Sun, that seemed so mildly to retire,
 Flung back from distant climes a streaming fire,
 Whose blaze is now subdued to tender gleams,

Prelude of night's approach with soothing dreams.
 Look round ;—of all the clouds not one is moving ;
 'Tis the still hour of thinking, feeling, loving.
 Silent, and stedfast as the vaulted sky
 The boundless plain of waters seems to lie :—
 Comes that low sound from breezes rustling o'er
 The grass-crowned headland that conceals the shore ?
 No ; 'tis the earth-voice of the mighty sea,
 Whispering how meek and gentle he can be ! *

Thou Power supreme ! who, arming to rebuke
 Offenders, dost put off the gracious look,
 And clothe thyself with terrors like the flood
 Of ocean roused into his fiercest mood,
 Whatever discipline thy Will ordain
 For the brief course that must for me remain ;
 Teach me with quick-eared spirit to rejoice
 In admonitions of thy softest voice !
 Whate'er the path these mortal feet may trace,
 Breathe through my soul the blessing of thy grace,
 Glad, through a perfect love, a faith sincere
 Drawn from the wisdom that begins with fear,
 Glad to expand ; and, for a season, free
 From finite cares, to rest absorbed in Thee !

Air slumbers—wave with wave no longer strives,
Only a heaving of the deep survives,*
A tell-tale motion! soon will it be laid,
And by the tide alone the water swayed.
Stealthy withdrawals, interminglings mild
Of light with shade in beauty reconciled—
Such is the prospect far as sight can range,
The soothing recompence, the welcome change.
Where now the ships that drove before the blast,
Threatened by angry breakers as they passed;
And by a train of flying clouds bemocked;
Or, in the hollow surge, at anchor rocked
As on a bed of death? Some lodge in peace,
Saved by His care who bade the tempest cease;
And some, too heedless of past danger, court
Fresh gales to waft them to the far-off port;
But near, or hanging sea and sky between,
Not one of all those wingèd powers is seen,
Seen in her course, nor 'mid this quiet heard;
Yet oh! how gladly would the air be stirred
By some acknowledgment of thanks and praise,
Soft in its temper as those vesper lays
Sung to the Virgin while accordant oars
Urge the slow bark along Calabrian shores;
A sea-born service through the mountains felt
Till into one loved vision all things melt:
Or like those hymns that soothe with graver sound
The gulfy coast of Norway iron-bound;
And, from the wide and open Baltic, rise
With punctual care, Lutheran harmonies.
Hush, not a voice is here! but why repine,

COMPOSED BY THE SEA-SHORE.

Comp. 1834. — Pub. 1845.

[These lines were suggested during my residence under my Son's roof at Moresby, on the coast near Whitehaven, at the time when I was composing those verses among the "Evening Voluntaries" that have reference to the sea. It was in that neighbourhood I first became acquainted with the ocean and its appearances and movements. My infancy and early childhood were passed at Cockermouth, about eight miles from the coast, and I well remember that mysterious awe with which I used to listen to anything said about storms and shipwrecks. Sea-shells of many descriptions were common in the town ; and I was not a little surprised when I heard that Mr Landor† had denounced me as a plagiarist from himself for having described a boy applying a sea-shell to his ear and listening to it for intimations of what was going on in its native element. This I had done myself scores of times, and it was a belief among us that we could know from the sound whether the tide was ebbing or flowing.]

WHAT mischief cleaves to unsubdued regret,
 How fancy sickens by vague hopes beset ;
 How baffled projects on the spirit prey,
 And fruitless wishes eat the heart away,
 The Sailor knows ; he best, whose lot is cast
 On the relentless sea that holds him fast
 On chance dependent, and the fickle star
 Of power, through long and melancholy war.

---

* Compare Robert Browning's Home-thoughts from the Sea—
 "While Jove's planet rises yonder, silent over Africa."

—Ed.

† The passage in Landor's Gebir, Book I., is quoted in a note to fourth book of The Excursion, (see Vol. V., p. 191).—Ed.

O sad it is, in sight of foreign shores,
 Daily to think on old familiar doors,
 Hearths loved in childhood, and ancestral floors ;
 Or, tossed about along a waste of foam,
 To ruminate on that delightful home
 Which with the dear Betrothèd was to come ;
 Or came and was and is, yet meets the eye
 Never but in the world of memory ;
 Or in a dream recalled, whose smoothest range
 Is crossed by knowledge, or by dread, of change,
 And if not so, whose perfect joy makes sleep
 A thing too bright for breathing man to keep.
 Hail to the virtues which that perilous life
 Extracts from Nature's elemental strife ;
 And welcome glory won in battles fought
 As bravely as the foe was keenly sought.
 But to each gallant Captain and his crew
 A less imperious sympathy is due,
 Such as my verse now yields, while moonbeams play
 On the mute sea in this unruffled bay ;
 Such as will promptly flow from every breast,
 Where good men, disappointed in the quest
 Of wealth and power and honours, long for rest ;
 Or, having known the splendours of success,
 Sigh for the obscurities of happiness.

TO THE UTILITARIANS.

The following fragment occurs in a letter to Henry Crabbe Robinson, dated 5th May 1833. It has not been previously published.

AVAUNT this economic rage !
 What would it bring ?—an iron age,
 Where Fact with heartless search explored
 Shall be Imagination's Lord,

332 ADIEU, RYDALIAN LAURELS! THAT HAVE GROWN.

And sway with absolute controul
The god-like Functions of the Soul.
Not thus can knowledge elevate
Our Nature from her fallen state.
With sober Reason Faith unites
To vindicate the ideal rights
Of human-kind—the tone agreeing
Of objects with internal seeing,
Of effort with the end of Being.

Wordsworth added, in the letter to Robinson, "Is the above intelligible? I fear not! I know, however, my own meaning, and that's enough for Manuscripts."—Ed.

POEMS,
COMPOSED OR SUGGESTED DURING A TOUR,
IN THE SUMMER OF 1833.

Comp. 1833. — Pub. 1835.

[My companions were H. C. Robinson and my son John.]

Having been prevented by the lateness of the season, in 1831, from visiting Staffa and Iona, the author made these the principal objects of a short tour in the summer of 1833, of which the following series of poems is a Memorial. The course pursued was down the Cumberland river Derwent, and to Whitehaven; thence (by the Isle of Man, where a few days were passed) up the Frith of Clyde to Greenock, then to Oban, Staffa, Iona; and back towards England by Loch Awe, Inverary, Loch Goil-head, Greenock, and through parts of Renfrewshire, Ayrshire, and Dumfries-shire to Carlisle, and thence up the river Eden, and homewards by Ullswater.

ADIEU, Rydalian Laurels! that have grown
And spread as if ye knew that days might come
When ye would shelter in a happy home,
On this fair Mount, a Poet of your own,
One who ne'er ventured for a Delphic crown

To sue the God ; but, haunting your green shade <sup>1</sup>
 All seasons through, is humbly pleased to braid <sup>2</sup>
 Ground-flowers, beneath your guardianship, self-sown.*
 Farewell ! no Minstrels now with harp new-strung
 For summer wandering quit their household bowers ;
 Yet not for this wants Poesy a tongue
 To cheer the Itinerant on whom she pours
 Her spirit, while he crosses lonely moors,
 Or musing sits forsaken halls among.

II.

WHY should the Enthusiast, journeying through this Isle,
 Repine as if his hour were come too late ?
 Not unprotected in her mouldering state,
 Antiquity salutes him with a smile,
 'Mid fruitful fields that ring with jocund toil,
 And pleasure-grounds where Taste, refined Co-mate
 Of Truth and Beauty, strives to imitate,
 Far as she may, primeval Nature's style.
 Fair Land ! by Time's parental love made free,
 By Social Order's watchful arms embraced ;
 With unexampled union meet in thee,
 For eye and mind, the present and the past ;
 With golden prospect for futurity,
 If that be revered which ought to last.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> One who to win your emblematic crown
 Aspires not, but frequenting your green shade MS.

THEY called Thee MERRY ENGLAND, in old time ;
 A happy people won for thee that name
 With envy heard in many a distant clime ;
 And, spite of change, for me thou keep'st the same
 Endearing title, a responsive chime
 To the heart's fond belief ; though some there are Whose sterner judgments deem that word a snare
 For inattentive Fancy, like the lime
 Which foolish birds are caught with. Can, I ask,
 This face of rural beauty be a mask
 For discontent, and poverty, and crime ;
 These spreading towns a cloak for lawless will ?
 Forbid it, Heaven !—and MERRY ENGLAND still
 Shall <sup>1</sup> be thy rightful name, in prose and rhyme !

* Many years ago, when I was at Greta Bridge, in Yorkshire, the hostess of the inn, proud of her skill in etymology, said, that "the name of the river was taken from the bridge, the form of which, as every one must notice, exactly resembled a great A." Dr Whitaker has derived it from the word of common occurrence in the north of England, "to greet;" signifying to lament aloud, mostly with weeping: a conjecture rendered more probable from the stony and rocky channel of both the Cumberland and Yorkshire rivers. The Cumberland Greta, though it does not, among the country people, take up that name till within three miles of its dis-

 Seats of glad instinct and love's carolling,
 The concert, for the happy, then may vie
 With liveliest peals of birth-day harmony :
 To a grieved heart, the notes are benisons.

Compare The Prelude, Book I. (see Vol. III., p. 139)—

 That one, the fairest of all rivers, loved

appearance in the river Derwent, may be considered as having its source in the mountain cove of Wythburn, and flowing through Thirlmere, the beautiful features of which lake are known only to those who, travelling between Grasmere and Keswick, have quitted the main road in the vale of Wythburn, and, crossing over to the opposite side of the lake, have proceeded with it on the right hand.

The channel of the Greta, immediately above Keswick, has, for the purposes of building, been in a great measure cleared of the immense stones which, by their concussion in high floods, produced the loud and awful noises described in the sonnet.

"The scenery upon this river," says Mr Southey in his Colloquies, "where it passes under the woody side of Latrigg, is of the finest and most rememberable kind :—

ADDRESS FROM THE SPIRIT OF COCKERMOUTH CASTLE. 337

And to those graves looking habitually
In kindred quiet I repose my trust.
Death to the innocent is more than just,
And, to the sinner, mercifully bent ;
So may I hope, if truly I repent
And meekly bear the ills which bear I must :
And You, my Offspring ! that do still remain,
Yet may outstrip me in the appointed race,
If e'er, through fault of mine, in mutual pain

NUN'S WELL, BRIGHAM.

[So named from the religious House that stood close by. I have rather an odd anecdote to relate of the Nun's Well. One day the landlady of a public-house, a field's length from the well, on the road side, said to me—"You have been to see the Nun's Well, Sir?" "The Nun's Well! what is that?" said the Postman, who in his royal livery stopt his mail-car at the door. The landlady and I explained to him what the name meant, and what sort of people the nuns were. A countryman who was standing by, rather tipsy, stammered out—"Aye, those nuns were good people; they are gone; but we shall soon have them back again." The Reform mania was just then at its height.]

THE cattle crowding round this beverage clear
To slake their thirst, with reckless hoofs have trod
The encircling turf into a barren clod;
Through which the waters creep, then disappear,
Born to be lost in Derwent flowing near;
Yet, o'er the brink, and round the lime-stone cell
Of the pure spring (they call it the "Nun's Well,"
Name that first struck by chance my startled ear)
A tender Spirit broods—the pensive Shade
Of ritual honours to this Fountain paid
By hooded Votaresses<sup>1</sup> with saintly cheer; †

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

(LANDING AT THE MOUTH OF THE DERWENT, WORKINGTON.)*

[I will mention for the sake of the friend who is writing down these notes, that it was among the fine Scotch firs near Ambleside, and particularly those near Green Bank, that I have over and over again paused at the sight of this image. Long may they stand to afford a like gratification to others! This wish is not uncalled for, several of their brethren having already disappeared.]

* "The fears and impatience of Mary were so great," says Robertson, "that she got into a fisher-boat, and with about twenty attendants landed at Workington, in Cumberland; and thence she was conducted with many marks of respect to Carlisle." The apartment in which the Queen had slept at Workington Hall (where she was received by Sir Henry Hall as became her rank and misfortunes) was long preserved, out of respect to her memory, as she had left it; and one cannot but regret that some necessary alterations in the mansion could not be effected without its destruction.—W. * St Bees' Heads, anciently called the Cliff of Baruth, are a conspicuous sea-mark for all vessels sailing in the N.E. parts of the Irish Sea. In a bay, one side of which is formed by the southern headland, stands the village of St Bees; a place distinguished, from very early times, for its religious and scholastic foundations.

"St Bees," says Nicholson and Burns, "had its name from Bega, an holy woman from Ireland, who is said to have founded here, about the year of our Lord 650, a small monastery, where afterwards a church was built in memory of her.

"The aforesaid religious house, being destroyed by the Danes, was restored by William de Meschiens, son of Ranulph, and brother of Ranulph de Meschiens, first Earl of Cumberland after the Conquest; and made a cell of a prior and six Benedictine monks to the Abbey of St Mary at York."

Several traditions of miracles, connected with the foundation of the first of these religious houses, survive among the people of the neighbourhood; one of which is alluded to in these Stanzas; and another, of a somewhat bolder and more peculiar character, has furnished the subject of a spirited poem by the Rev. R. Parkinson, M.A., late Divinity Lecturer of St Bees' College, and now Fellow of the Collegiate Church of Manchester.

After the dissolution of the monasteries, Archbishop Grindal founded a free school at St Bees, from which the counties of Cumberland and Westmoreland have derived great benefit ; and recently, under the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale, a college has been established there for the education of ministers for the English Church. The old Conventual Church has been repaired under the superintendence of the Rev. Dr Ainger, the Head of the College ; and is well worthy of being visited by any strangers who might be led to the neighbourhood of this celebrated spot.

The form of stanza in this Poem, and something in the style of versification, are adopted from the "St Monica," a poem of much beauty upon a monastic subject, by Charlotte Smith : a lady to whom English verse is under greater obligations than are likely to be either acknowledged or remembered. She wrote little, and that little unambitiously, but with true feeling for rural nature, at a time when nature was not much regarded by English Poets ; for in point of time her earlier writings preceded, I believe, those of Cowper and Burns.—W. W., 1835.

Yet, while each useful Art augments her store,
 What boots the gain if Nature should lose more,—
 And Wisdom, as she holds<sup>1</sup> a Christian place
 In man's intelligence sublimed by grace?
 When Bega sought of yore the Cumbrian coast,*
 Tempestuous winds her holy errand crossed:
 She<sup>2</sup> knelt in prayer—the waves their wrath appease;
 And, from her vow well weighed in Heaven's decrees,
 Rose, where she touched the strand, the Chantry of St Bees.

“Cruel of heart were they, bloody of hand,”
 Who in these Wilds then struggled for command;†
 The strong were merciless, without hope the weak;
 Till this bright Stranger came, fair as daybreak,
 And as a cresset true that darts its length
 Of beamy lustre from a tower of strength;
 Guiding the mariner through troubled seas,
 And cheering off his peaceful reveries,
 Like the fixed Light that crowns yon Headland of St Bees.

To aid the Votaress, miracles believed
 Wrought in men's minds, like miracles achieved;
 So piety took root; and Song might tell
 What humanising virtues near her cell<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 1837.	Were . . . . .	1835.
<sup>2</sup> 1837.	. . . . . was past away
	Said . . . . .	1835.

* I am aware that I am here treading upon tender ground; but to the intelligent reader I feel that no apology is due. The prayers of survivors, during passionate grief for the recent loss of relatives and friends, as the object of those prayers could no longer be the suffering body of the dying, would naturally be ejaculated for the souls of the departed; the barriers between the two worlds dissolving before the power of love and faith. The ministers of religion, from their habitual attendance upon sick-beds, would be daily witnesses of these benign results; and hence would be strongly tempted to aim at giving to them permanence, by embodying them in rites and ceremonies, recurring at stated periods. All this, as it was in course of nature, so was it blameless, and even praiseworthy; since some of its effects, in that rude state of society, could not but be salutary. No reflecting person, however, can view without sorrow the abuses which rose out of thus formalising sublime instincts, and disinterested movements of passion, and perverting them into means of gratifying the ambition and rapacity of the priesthood. But, while we deplore and are indignant at these abuses, it would be a great mistake if we imputed the origin of the offices to prospective selfishness on the part of the monks and clergy: they were at first sincere in their sympathy, and in their degree dupes rather of their own creed, than artful and designing men. Charity is, upon the whole, the safest guide that we can take in judging our fellow-men, whether of past ages, or of the present time.—W. W., 1835.

Ah ! scorn not hastily their rule who try
 Earth to despise, and flesh to mortify ;
 Consume with zeal, in wingèd ecstasies
 Of prayer and praise forget their rosaries,
 Nor hear the loudest surges of St Bees.

Yet none so prompt to succour and protect
 The forlorn traveller, or sailor wrecked
 On the bare coast ; nor do they grudge the boon
 Which staff and cockle hat and sandal shoon
 Claim for the pilgrim : and, though chidings sharp
 May sometimes greet the strolling minstrel's harp,
 It is not then when, swept with sportive ease,
 It charms a feast day throng of all degrees,
 Brightening the archway of revered St Bees.

How did the cliffs and echoing hills rejoice
 What time the Benedictine Brethren's voice,
 Imploring, or commanding with meet pride,
 Summoned the Chiefs to lay their feuds aside,
 And under one blest ensign serve the Lord
 In Palestine. Advance, indignant Sword !
 Flaming till thou from Panyms hands release
 That tomb, dread centre of all sanctities
 Nursed in the quiet Abbey of St Bees.

But look we now to them whose minds from far<sup>1</sup>

The Star of Bethlehem from its sphere invites
 To sound the crystal depth of maiden rights ;
 And wedded Life, through scriptural mysteries,
 Heavenward ascends with all her charities,
 Taught by the hooded Celibates of St Bees.

Nor be it e'er forgotten how by skill
 Of cloistered Architects, free their souls to fill
 With love of God, throughout the Land were raised
 Churches, on whose symbolic beauty gazed
 Peasant and mail-clad Chief with pious awe ;
 As at this day men seeing what they saw,
 Or the bare wreck of faith's solemnities,
 Aspire to more than earthly destinies ;
 Witness yon Pile that greets us from St Bees.

Yet more ; around those Churches, gathered Towns*
 Safe from the feudal Castle's haughty frowns ;
 Peaceful abodes, where Justice might uphold
 Her scales with even hand, and culture mould
 The heart to pity, train the mind in care
 For rules of life, sound as the Time could bear.
 Nor dost thou fail, thro' abject love of ease,
 Or hindrance raised by sordid purposes,
 To bear thy part in this good work, St Bees.†

Who with the ploughshare clove the barren moors,
 And to green meadows changed the swampy shores ?
 Thinned the rank woods ; and for the cheerful grange
 Made room where wolf and boar were used to range ?

Who taught, and showed by deeds, that gentler chains
 Should bind the vassal to his lord's domains ?
 The thoughtful Monks, intent their God to please,
 For Christ's dear sake, by human sympathies
 Poured from the bosom of thy Church, St Bees !

But all availed not ; by a mandate given
 Through lawless will the Brotherhood was driven
 Forth from their cells ; their ancient House laid low
 In Reformation's sweeping overthrow.
 But now once more the local Heart revives,
 The inextinguishable Spirit strives.
 Oh may that Power who hushed the stormy seas,
 And cleared a way for the first Votaries,
 Prosper the new-born College of St Bees ! *

Alas ! the Genius of our age, from Schools
 Less humble, draws her lessons, aims, and rules.
 To Prowess guided by her insight keen
 Matter and Spirit are as one Machine ;
 Boastful Idolatress of formal skill
 She in her own would merge the eternal will :
 Better,<sup>1</sup> if Reason's triumphs match with these,
 Her flight before the bold credulities
 That furthered the first teaching of St Bees.†

IN THE CHANNEL, BETWEEN THE COAST OF CUMBERLAND AND THE ISLE OF MAN.

RANGING the heights of Scawfell or Black-comb,
 In his lone course the Shepherd oft will pause,
 And strive to fathom the mysterious laws
 By which the clouds, arrayed in light or gloom,
 On Mona settle, and the shapes assume
 Of all her peaks and ridges.* What he draws
 From sense, faith, reason, fancy, of the cause,
 He will take with him to the silent tomb.
 Or, by his fire, a child upon his knee,

 Blest in their pious ignorance, though weak
 To cope with Sages undevoutly free.

ON ENTERING DOUGLAS BAY, ISLE OF MAN.

'Dignum laude virum Musa vetat mori.'

THE feudal Keep, the bastions of Cohorn,*
 Even when they rose to check or to repel
 Tides of aggressive war, oft served as well
 Greedy ambition, armed to treat with scorn
 Just limits; but yon Tower, whose smiles adorn
 This perilous bay, stands clear of all offence;
 Blest work it is of love and innocence,
 A Tower of refuge built for the else forlorn.<sup>1</sup>
 Spare it, ye waves, and lift the mariner,
 Struggling for life, into its saving arms!
 Spare, too, the human helpers! Do they stir
 'Mid your fierce shock like men afraid to die?
 No; their dread service nerves the heart it warms,
 And they are led by noble HILLARY.†

* Baron Menno van Cohorn (or Coehoorn) was a Dutch military engineer of genius (1641-1704). His fame rests on discoveries connected with the effect of projectiles on fortifications. His practical successes against the French, under Vauban, were great; and the fortifications he designed and constructed, of which that of Bergen-op-Zoom was the chief, give him a place in the history of military science, greater than that derived from his writings. He devised a kind of small mortar or howitzer, for use in siege operations, which is named after him a Cohorn.—Ed.

† The TOWER OF REFUGE, an ornament to Douglas Bay, was erected chiefly through the humanity and zeal of Sir William Hillary; and he also was the founder of the lifeboat establishment, at that place; by which, under his superintendence, and often by his exertions at the imminent hazard of his own life, many seamen and passengers have been saved.—W. W., 1835.

In Dorothy Wordsworth's Journal of a visit to the Isle of Man in 1826, the following occurs:—"Monday, July 3rd.—Sir William Hillary saved a boy's life to-day in harbour. He raised a regiment for government, and chose his own reward, viz., a Baronetcy! and now lives here on £300 per annum, &c., &c."—Ed.

BY THE SEA-SHORE, ISLE OF MAN.

WHY stand we gazing on the sparkling Brine,
 With wonder smit by its transparency
 And all-enraptured with its purity?—
 Because the unstained, the clear, the crystalline,
 Have ever in them something of benign;
 Whether in gem, in water, or in sky,
 A sleeping infant's brow, or wakeful eye
 Of a young maiden, only not divine.
 Scarcely the hand forbears to dip its palm
 For beverage drawn as from a mountain-well;
 Temptation centres in the liquid Calm;
 Our daily raiment seems no obstacle
 To instantaneous plunging in, deep Sea!
 And revelling in long embrace with thee.*

 With just enough life's comforts to procure,
 In a snug Cove on this our favoured Isle,
 A peaceful spot where Nature's gifts abound ;
 Then sure I have no reason to complain,
 Though poor to Sea I went, and poor I still remain.

TYNWALD HILL.

[Mr Robinson and I walked the greater part of the way from Castle-town to Piel, and stopped some time at Tynwald Hill. One of my companions was an elderly man who, in a muddy way (for he was tipsy), explained and answered, as far as he could, my enquiries about this place and the ceremonies held here. I found more agreeable company in some little children; one of whom, upon my request, recited the Lord's Prayer to me, and I helped her to a clearer understanding of it as well as I could; but I was not at all satisfied with my own part; hers was much better done, and I am persuaded that, like other children, she knew more about it than she was able to express, especially to a stranger.]

only the tower, refectory, and dormitory. The tower is still yellowed with lichen stains. The following occurs in one of Mr H., C. Robinson's letters on the Italian Tour of 1837 :—"This reminds me that I was once privy to the conception of a Sonnet with a distinctness which did not once occur on the longer Italian journey. This was when I accompanied him into the Isle of Man. We had been drinking tea with Mr and Mrs Cookson, and left them when the weather was dull. Very soon after leaving them we passed the Church Tower of Bala-Sala. The upper part of the tower had a sort of frieze of yellow lichens. Mr W. pointed it out to me, and said, 'It's a perpetual sunshine.' I thought no more of it till I had read the beautiful sonnet,

'Broken in fortune, but in mind entire.'

* The ground at Tynwald Hill (as it is called) remains unchanged.

Stage above stage) would sit this Island's King,
 The laws to promulgate, enrobed and crowned ;
 While, compassing the little mount around,
 Degrees and Orders stood, each under each :
 Now, like to things within fate's easiest reach,<sup>1</sup>
 The power is merged, the pomp a grave has found.
 Off with yon cloud,<sup>2</sup> old Snafell ! * that thine eye
 Over three Realms may take its widest range ;
 And let, for them, thy fountains utter strange
 Voices, thy winds break forth in prophecy,
 If the whole State must suffer mortal change,

---

Here, on a small plot of ground, the whole Manx people meet annually on Midsummer Day, July 5th, to appoint officers and enact new laws. The first historical notice of these meetings is in 1417. The name Tynwald is derived from the Scandinavian thing, "court of justice," and wald, "fenced." The mound is only 12 feet high, rising by four circular platforms, each 3 feet higher than the one below it. The circumference at the base is 240 feet, and at the top 18 feet. It used once to be walled round, and had two gates. The approach now is by twenty-one steps cut in the turf.—Ed.

* The summit of this mountain is well chosen by Cowley as the scene of the "Vision" in which the spectral angel discourses with him concerning the government of Oliver Cromwell. "I found myself," says he, "on the top of that famous hill in the Island Mona, which has the prospect of three great, and not long since most happy, kingdoms. As soon as ever I looked upon them, they called forth the sad representation of all the sins and all the miseries that had overwhelmed them these twenty years." It is not to be denied that the changes now in progress, and the passions, and the way in which they work, strikingly resemble those which led to the disasters the philosophic writer so feelingly bewails. God grant that the resemblance may not become still more striking as months and years advance !—W. W., 1835.

The top of Snafell (which Wordsworth names "Snafell"), the highest mountain in the Isle of Man, whence England, Scotland, and Ireland are to be seen, as mentioned in the Sonnet, is not visible from Tynwald Hill.—Ed.

not one of them seemed to notice the magnificent objects with which we were surrounded; and even the phenomenon of the eclipse attracted but little of their attention. Was it right not to regret this? They appeared to me, however, so much alive in their own minds to their own concerns that I could not look upon it as a misfortune that they had little perception for such pleasures as cannot be cultivated without ease and leisure. Yet, if one surveys life in all its duties and relations, such ease and leisure will not be found so enviable a privilege as it may at first appear. Natural Philosophy, Painting, and Poetry, and refined taste are no doubt great acquisitions to society; but among those who dedicate themselves to such pursuits, it is to be feared that few are as happy, and as consistent in the management of their lives, as the class of persons who at that time led me into this course of reflection. I do not mean by this to be understood to derogate from intellectual pursuits, for that would be monstrous: I say it in deep gratitude for this compensation to those whose cares are limited to the necessities of daily life. Among them, self-tormentors, so numerous in the higher classes of society, are rare.]

SINCE risen from ocean, ocean to defy,

Not undeserved, of the memorial rhymes
That animate my way where'er it leads !

Lieutenant-Colonel M'Dougal of Dunolie writes to me (October 1883) that "the mosaic picture of an eagle—if it may be called so—still exists, though it is rather a rude work of art. I believe it was executed by a gardener, who was here about the time of Wordsworth's visit. It was made of small stones, and is now a good deal overgrown with weeds, moss, &c., as the second story of the old ruin is open to the weather. An eagle was for many years kept in a cage, made against a wall of the ruin, and this no doubt was the cause of the rude picture being made."—Ed.

THE DUNOLLY EAGLE.

NOT to the clouds, not to the cliff, he flew ;
But when a storm, on sea or mountain bred,
Came and delivered him, alone he sped
Into the castle-dungeon's darkest mew.
Now, near his master's house in open view
He dwells, and hears indignant tempests howl,
Kennelled and chained. Ye tame domestic fowl,<sup>1</sup>
Beware of him ! Thou, saucy cockatoo,
Look to thy plumage and thy life !—The roe,
Fleet as the west wind, is for him no quarry ;
Balanced in ether he will never tarry,
Eyeing the sea's blue depths. Poor Bird ! even so
Doth man of brother man a creature make
That clings to slavery for its own sad sake.

Spirit of Ossian ! if imbound
 In language thou may'st yet be found,
 If aught (intrusted to the pen
 Or floating on the tongues of men,
 Albeit shattered and impaired)
 Subsist thy dignity to guard,
 In concert with memorial claim
 Of old grey stone, and high-born name
 That cleaves to rock or pillared cave
 Where moans the blast, or beats the wave,
 Let Truth, stern arbitress of all,
 Interpret that Original,
 And for presumptuous wrongs atone ;—
 Authentic works be given, or none !

Time is not blind ;—yet He, who spares
 Pyramid pointing to the stars,
 Hath preyed with ruthless appetite
 On all that marked the primal flight
 Of the poetic ecstasy
 Into the land of mystery.
 No tongue is able to rehearse
 One measure, Orpheus ! of thy verse ;*
 Musæus, stationed with his lyre
 Supreme among the Elysian quire,
 Is, for the dwellers upon earth
 Mute as a lark ere morning's birth.†
 Why grieve for these, though past away
 The music, and extinct the lay ?

When thousands, by severer doom,
 Full early to the silent tomb
 Have sunk, at Nature's call ; or strayed
 From hope and promise, self-betrayed ;
 The garland withering on their brows ;
 Stung<sup>1</sup> with remorse for broken vows ;
 Frantic—else how might they rejoice ?
 And friendless, by their own sad choice !

Hail, Bards of mightier grasp ! on you
 I chiefly call, the chosen Few,
 Who cast not off the acknowledged guide,
 Who faltered not, nor turned aside ;
 Whose lofty genius could survive
 Privation, under sorrow thrive ;
 In whom the fiery Muse revered
 The symbol of a snow-white beard,
 Bedewed with meditative tears
 Dropped from the lenient cloud of years.

Brothers in soul ! though distant times
 Produced you nursed in various climes,
 Ye, when the orb of life had waned,
 A plenitude of love retained :
 Hence, while in you each sad regret
 By corresponding hope was met,
 Ye lingered among human kind,
 Sweet voices for the passing wind ;
 Departing sunbeams, loth to stop,
 Though smiling on the last hill top !*

CAVE OF STAFFA.†

WE saw, but surely, in the motley crowd,
 Not One of us has felt the far-famed sight ;
 How could we feel it ? each the other's blight,
 Hurried and hurrying, volatile and loud.
 O for those motions only that invite
 The Ghost of Fingal to his tuneful Cave
 By the breeze entered, and wave after wave
 Softly embosoming the timid light !
 And by one Votary who at will might stand
 Gazing and take into his mind and heart,
 With undistracted reverence, the effect
 Of those proportions where the almighty Hand
 That made the worlds, the sovereign Architect,
 Has deigned to work as if with human Art !

AFTER THE CROWD HAD DEPARTED.

THANKS for the lessons of this Spot—fit school
 For the presumptuous thoughts that would assign
 Mechanic laws to agency divine ;
 And, measuring heaven by earth, would over-rule
 Infinite Power. The pillared vestibule,
 Expanding yet precise, the roof embowed,*
 Might seem designed to humble man, when proud
 Of his best workmanship by plan and tool.
 Down-bearing with his whole Atlantic weight
 Of tide and tempest on the Structure's base,
 And flashing to that Structure's topmost height,<sup>1</sup>
 Ocean has proved its strength, and of its grace
 In calms is conscious,† finding for his freight
 Of softest music some responsive place.

 In every cell of Fingal's mystic Grot,
 Where are ye ? Driven or venturing to the spot,

And, by your mien and bearing, knew your names ;
 And they could hear his ghostly song who trod
 Earth, till the flesh lay on him like a load,
 While he struck his desolate harp without hopes or aims.
 Vanished ye are, but subject to recal ;
 Why keep we else the instincts whose dread law
 Ruled here of yore, till what men felt they saw,
 Not by black arts but magic natural !
 If eyes be still sworn vassals of belief,
 Yon light shapes forth a Bard, that shade a Chief.

FLOWERS ON THE TOP OF THE PILLARS AT THE ENTRANCE OF THE CAVE.

HOPE smiled when your nativity was cast,
 Children of Summer ! * Ye fresh Flowers that brave
 What Summer here escapes not, the fierce wave,
 And whole artillery of the western blast,
 Battering the Temple's front, its long-drawn nave
 Smiting, as if each moment were their last.
 But ye, bright Flowers, on frieze and architrave
 Survive ; † and once again the Pile stands fast ;
 Calm as the Universe, from specular towers
 Of heaven contemplated by Spirits pure

* Upon the head of the columns which form the front of the cave, rests a body of decomposed basaltic matter, which was richly decorated with that large bright flower, the ox-eyed daisy. How sad a welcome! To each voyager <sup>1</sup>
 Some ragged child holds up for sale a store <sup>2</sup>
 Of wave-worn pebbles, pleading on the shore <sup>3</sup>
 Where once came monk and nun with gentle stir,
 Blessings to give, news ask, or suit prefer.
 Yet is <sup>4</sup> yon neat trim church * a grateful speck
 Of novelty amid the sacred wreck
 Strewn far and wide. Think, proud Philosopher! <sup>5</sup>
 Fallen though she be, this Glory of the West, <sup>6</sup>
 Still on her sons, the beams of mercy shine;
 And ' hopes, perhaps more heavenly bright than thine,
 A grace by thee unsought and unpossesst,
 A faith more fixed, a rapture more divine,
 Shall gild their passage to eternal rest.'

THE BLACK STONES OF IONA.

HERE on their knees men swore ; the stones were black,†
 Black in the people's minds and words,<sup>1</sup> yet they
 Were at that time, as now, in colour grey.
 But what is colour, if upon the rack
 Of conscience souls are placed by deeds that lack
 Concord with oaths ? What differ night and day
 Then, when before the Perjured on his way
 Hell opens, and the heavens in vengeance crack
 Above his head uplifted in vain prayer
 To Saint, or Fiend,<sup>2</sup> or to the Godhead whom
 He had insulted—Peasant, King, or Thane ?
 Fly where the culprit may, guilt meets a doom ;
 And, from invisible worlds at need laid bare,
 Come links for social order's awful chain.

 We who were led to-day down a grim dell,
 By some too boldly named 'the Jaws of Hell':‡
 Where be the wretched ones, the sights for pity?
 These crowded streets resound no plaintive ditty:—

[Mosgiel was thus pointed out to me by a young man on the top of the coach on my way from Glasgow to Kilmarnock. It is remarkable that, though Burns lived some time here, and during much the most productive period of his poetical life, he nowhere adverts to the splendid prospects stretching towards the sea and bounded by the peaks of Arran on one part, which in clear weather he must have had daily before his eyes. In one of his poetical effusions he speaks of describing “ fair Nature's face ” as a privilege on which he sets a high value ; nevertheless, natural appearances rarely take a lead in his poetry. It is as a human being, eminently sensitive and intelligent, and not as a poet, clad in his priestly robes and carrying the ensigns of sacerdotal office, that he interests and affects us. Whether he speaks of rivers, hills and woods, it is not so much on account of the properties with which they are absolutely endowed, as relatively to local patriotic remembrances and associations, or as they ministered to personal feelings, especially those of love, whether happy or otherwise ;—yet it is not always so. Soon after we had passed Mosgiel Farm we crossed the Ayr, murmuring and winding through a narrow woody hollow. His line—“ Auld hermit Ayr strays through his woods ”—came at once to my mind with Irwin, Lugar, Ayr, and Doon,—Ayrshire streams over which he breathes a sigh as being unnamed in song ; and surely his own attempts to make them known were as successful as his heart could desire.]

“ THERE ! ” said a Stripling, pointing with meet pride
 Towards a low roof with green trees half concealed,
 “ Is Mosgiel Farm ; and that's the very field
 Where Burns ploughed up the Daisy.” † Far and wide

A plain below stretched seaward, while, descried
 Above sea-clouds, the Peaks of Arran rose;
 And, by that simple notice, the repose
 Of earth, sky, sea, and air, was vivified.
 Beneath 'the random bield of clod or stone'
 Myriads of daisies have shone forth in flower
 Near the lark's nest, and in their natural hour
 Have passed away; less happy than the One
 That, by the unwilling ploughshare, died to prove
 The tender charm of poetry and love.

THE RIVER EDEN, CUMBERLAND.

[“Nature gives thee flowers
 That have no rivals among British bowers.”
 This can scarcely be true to the letter; but, without stretching the point at all, I can say that the soil and air appear more congenial with many upon the banks of this river than I have observed in any other parts of Great Britain.]

EDEN! till now thy beauty had I viewed<sup>1</sup>

MONUMENT OF MRS HOWARD,

(by Nollekens,)

IN WETHERAL CHURCH, NEAR CORBY, ON THE BANKS OF THE EDEN.

[Before this monument was put up in the Church at Wetheral, I saw it in the sculptor's studio. Nollekens, who, by-the-by, was a strange and grotesque figure that interfered much with one's admiration of his works, showed me at the same time the various models in clay which he

from the word Dean, a valley? Langdale, near Ambleside, is by the inhabitants called Langden. The former syllable occurs in the name Emont, a principal feeder of the Eden; and the stream which flows, when the tide is out, over Cartmel Sands, is called the Ea—French, eau—Latin, aqua.—W. W., 1835.

* Especially on the upper reaches of the river, as seen from the Midland Railway line beyond Appleby.—Ed.

had made, one after another, of the Mother and her Infant: the improvement on each was surprising; and how so much grace, beauty, and tenderness had come out of such a head I was sadly puzzled to conceive. Upon a window-seat in his parlour lay two casts of faces, one of the Duchess of Devonshire, so noted in her day; and the other of Mr Pitt, taken after his death, a ghastly resemblance, as these things always are, even when taken from the living subject, and more ghastly in this instance from the peculiarity of the features. The heedless and apparently neglectful manner in which the faces of these two persons were left—the one so distinguished in London society, and the other upon whose counsels and public conduct, during a most momentous period, depended the fate of this great Empire and perhaps of all Europe—afforded a lesson to which the dullest of casual visitors could scarcely be insensible. It touched me the more because I had so often seen Mr Pitt upon his own ground at Cambridge and upon the floor of the House of Commons.]

STRETCHED on the dying Mother's lap, lies dead
 Her new-born Babe; dire ending<sup>1</sup> of bright hope!
 But Sculpture here, with the divinest scope
 Of luminous faith, heavenward hath raised that head
 So patiently; and through one hand has spread
 A touch so tender for the insensate Child—
 (Earth's lingering love to parting reconciled,
 Brief parting, for the spirit is all but fled)—
 That we who contemplate the turns of life
 Through this still medium, are consoled and cheered;
 Feel with the Mother, think the severed Wife
 Is less to be lamented than revered;
 And own that Art, triumphant over strife
 And pain, hath powers to Eternity endeared.

NUNNERY.*

[I became acquainted with the walks of Nunnery when a boy : they are within easy reach of a day's pleasant excursion from the town of Penrith, where I used to pass my summer holidays under the roof of my maternal Grandfather. The place is well worth visiting ; though, within these few years, its privacy, and therefore the pleasure which the scene is so well fitted to give, has been injuriously affected by walks cut in the rocks on that side the stream which had been left in its natural state.]

THE MONUMENT COMMONLY CALLED LONG MEG
AND HER DAUGHTERS, NEAR THE RIVER EDEN.

Pub. 1836.

A WEIGHT of awe, not easy to be borne,
Fell suddenly upon my Spirit—cast
From the dread bosom of the unknown past,
When first I saw that family forlorn.
Speak Thou, whose massy strength and stature scorn
The power of years—pre-eminent, and placed
Apart, to overlook the circle vast—
Speak, Giant-mother! tell it to the Morn
While she dispels the cumbrous shades of Night;
Let the Moon hear, emerging from a cloud;
At whose behest uprose on British ground
That Sisterhood, in hieroglyphic round
Forth-shadowing, some have deemed, the infinite,
The inviolable God, that tames the proud! †

---

* Compare the Sonnet On the projected Kendal and Windermere Railway, written in 1844.—Ed.

† The daughters of Long Meg, placed in a perfect circle eighty yards in diameter, are seventy-two in number above ground; a little way out the circle stands Long Meg herself, a single stone, eighteen feet high. When I first saw this monument, as I came upon it by surprise, I might over-rate its importance as an object; but, though it will not bear a comparison with Stonehenge, I must say, I have not seen any other relique of those dark ages, which can pretend to rival it in singularity and dignity of appearance.—W. W., 1835.

In a letter to Sir George Beaumont, January 6, 1821, Wordsworth wrote, "My road brought me suddenly and unexpectedly upon that ancient monument, called by the country people Long Meg and her Daughters. Everybody has heard of it, and so had I from very early childhood; but had never seen it before. Next to Stonehenge it is beyond dispute the most noble relic of the kind that this or probably any other country contains. Long Meg is a single block of unhewn stone, eighteen feet high,

LOWTHER.

["Cathedral pomp." It may be questioned whether this union was in the contemplation of the artist when he planned the edifice. However this might be, a poet may be excused for taking the view of the subject presented in this Sonnet.]

LOWTHER! in thy majestic Pile are seen <sup>1</sup>
 Cathedral pomp and grace, in apt accord <sup>2</sup>
 With the baronial castle's sterner mien ;*
 Union significant of God adored,
 And charters won and guarded by the sword

* The present Castle was begun in 1808. It is in the style of the 13th and 14th century structures. The arched corridors surrounding the staircaae—which is sixty feet square and ninety feet high—may justify the description in the sonnet. These stone corridors open on each side, through the centre of the castle. Compare the reference to Lowther in Barron's Travels in China, p. 134, in the course of his description of "Gehol's matchless gardens" referred to in The Prelude, Book viii.  Fortitude, and that Christian Charity
 Which, filling, consecrates the human breast.
 And if the Motto on thy 'scutcheon teach
 With truth, "THE MAGISTRACY SHOWS THE MAN;"
That searching test thy public course has stood;<sup>1</sup>
 As will be owned alike by bad and good,
 Soon as the measuring of life's little span
 Shall place thy virtues out of Envy's reach.*

Lonsdale! it were unworthy of a Guest,
 One chiefly well aware how much he owes
 To thy regard, to speak in verse or prose
 Of types and signs harmoniously imprest
 On thy Abode, neglecting to attest
 That in thy Mansion's Lord as well agree
 Meekness and strength and Christian charity,
 That filling, consecrates the human breast.
 And if, as thy armorial bearings teach,
 "The Magistracy indicates the Man,"
 That test thy life triumphantly has stood.

* This sonnet was written immediately after certain trials, which took place at the Cumberland Assizes, when the Earl of Lonsdale, in consequence of repeated and long-continued attacks upon his character, through the local press, had thought it right to prosecute the conductors and proprietors of three several journals. A verdict of libel was given in one case; and, in the others, the prosecutions were withdrawn, upon the individuals retracting and disavowing the charges, expressing regret that they had been made, and promising to abstain from the like in future.—W. W., 1835.

XLVI.

THE SOMNAMBULIST.*

[This poem might be dedicated to my friends, Sir G. Beaumont and Mr Rogers jointly. While we were making an excursion together in this part of the Lake District we heard that Mr Glover, the artist, while lodging at Lyulph's Tower, had been disturbed by a loud shriek, and upon rising he had learnt that it had come from a young woman in the house who was in the habit of walking in her sleep. In that state she had gone down stairs, and, while attempting to open the outer door, either from some difficulty or the effect of the cold stone upon her feet, had uttered the cry which alarmed him. It seemed to us all that this might serve as a hint for a poem, and the story here told was constructed and soon after put into verse by me as it now stands.]

LIST, ye who pass by Lyulph's Tower<sup>1</sup> †
 At eve ; how softly then
 Doth Aira-force, that torrent hoarse,
 Speak from the woody glen ! ‡
 Fit music for a solemn vale !
 And holier seems the ground<sup>2</sup>

To him who catches<sup>1</sup> on the gale
 The spirit of a mournful tale,
 Embodied in the sound.

Not far from that fair site whereon
 The Pleasure-house is reared,
 As story says, in antique days
 A stern-browed house appeared ;
 Foil to a Jewel rich in light
 There set, and guarded well ;
 Cage for a Bird of plumage bright,
 Sweet-voiced, nor wishing for a flight
 Beyond her native dell.

To win this bright Bird from her cage,
 To make this Gem their own,
 Came Barons bold, with store of gold,
 And Knights of high renown ;
 But one She prized, and only one ;
 Sir Eglamore was he ;
 Full happy season, when was known,
 Ye Dales and Hills ! to you alone
 Their mutual loyalty—<sup>2</sup>

Known chiefly, Aira ! to thy glen,
 Thy brook, and bowers of holly ;
 Where Passion caught what Nature taught,
 That all but love is folly ;
 Where Fact with Fancy stooped to play ;

Doubt came not, nor regret—
 To trouble hours that winged their way,
 As if through an immortal day
 Whose sun could never set.

But in old times Love dwelt not long<sup>1</sup>
 Sequester'd with repose ;
 Best throve the fire of chaste desire,
 Fanned by the breath of foes.
 " A conquering lance is beauty's test,
 And proves the Lover true ;"
 So spake Sir Eglamore, and pressed
 The drooping Emma<sup>2</sup> to his breast,
 And looked a blind adieu.

They parted.—Well with him it fared
 Through wide-spread regions errant ;
 A knight of proof in love's behoof,
 The thirst of fame his warrant :
 And She her happiness<sup>3</sup> can build
 On woman's quiet hours ;
 Though faint, compared with spear and shield,
 The solace beads and masses yield,
 And needlework and flowers.

Yet blest was Emma<sup>4</sup> when she heard
 Her Champion's praise recounted ;
 Though brain would swim, and eyes grow dim,
 And high her blushes mounted ;

Or when a bold heroic lay
 She warbled from full heart ;
 Delightful blossoms for the May
 Of absence ! but they will not stay,
 Born only to depart.

Hope wanes with her, while lustre fills
 Whatever path he chooses ;
 As if his orb, that owns no curb,
 Received the light her's loses.
 He comes not back ; an ampler space
 Requires for nobler deeds ;
 He ranges on from place to place,
 Till of his doings is no trace,
 But what her fancy breeds.

His fame may spread, but in the past
 Her spirit finds its centre ;
 Clear sight She has of what he was,
 And that would now content her.
 " Still is he my devoted Knight ?"
 The tear in answer flows ;
 Month falls on month with heavier weight ;
 Day sickens round her, and the night
 Is empty of repose.

In sleep She sometimes walked abroad,
 Deep sighs with quick words blending,
 Like that pale Queen whose hands are seen
 With fancied spots contending ;*
 But she is innocent of blood,—
 The moon is not more pure

* See Macbeth, Act iv., Scene 5.—ED.

That shines aloft, while through the wood
 She thrids her way, the sounding Flood
 Her melancholy lure !

While 'mid the fern-brake sleeps the doe,
 And owls alone are waking,
 In white arrayed, glides on the Maid
 The downward pathway taking,
 That leads her to the torrent's side
 And to a holly bower ;
 By whom on this still night descried ?
 By whom in that lone place espied ?
 By thee, Sir Eglamore !<sup>1</sup>

A wandering Ghost, so thinks the Knight,
 His coming step has thwarted,
 Beneath the boughs that heard their vows,
 Within whose shade they parted.
 Hush, hush, the busy Sleeper see !
 Perplexed her fingers seem,
 As if they from the holly tree
 Green twigs would pluck, as rapidly
 Flung from her to the stream.

What means the Spectre ? Why intent
 To violate the Tree,
 Thought Eglamore, by which I swore
 Unfading constancy ?
 Here am I, and to-morrow's sun,
 To her I left, shall prove
 That bliss is ne'er so surely won
 As when a circuit has been run
 Of valour, truth, and love.

<sup>1</sup> The knight, Sir Eglamore.

So from the spot whereon he stood,
 He moved with stealthy pace ;
 And, drawing nigh, with his living eye,<sup>1</sup>
 He recognised the face ;
 And whispers caught, and speeches small,
 Some to the green-leaved tree,
 Some muttered to the torrent-fall ;—
 “ Roar on, and bring him with thy call ;
 I heard, and so may He !”

Soul-shattered was the Knight, nor knew
 If Emma's Ghost<sup>2</sup> it were,
 Or boding Shade, or if the Maid
 Her very self stood there.
 He touched ; what followed who shall tell ?
 The soft touch snapped the thread
 Of slumber—shrieking back she fell,
 And the Stream whirled her down the dell
 Along its foaming bed.

In plunged the Knight !—when on firm ground<sup>3</sup>
 The rescued Maiden lay,
 Her eyes grew bright with blissful light,
 Confusion passed away ;
 She heard, ere to the throne of grace
 Her faithful Spirit flew,
 His voice—beheld his speaking face ;
 And, dying, from his own embrace,
 She felt that he was true.

So was he reconciled to life :
 Brief words may speak the rest ;<sup>3</sup>

Within the dell he built a cell,
 And there was Sorrow's guest ;
 In hermits' weeds repose he found,
 From vain temptations<sup>1</sup> free ; *
 Beside the torrent dwelling—bound
 By one deep heart-controlling sound,
 And awed to piety.

Wild stream of Aira, hold thy course,
 Nor fear memorial lays,
 Where clouds that spread in solemn shade,
 Are edged with golden rays !
 Dear art thou to the light of heaven,
 Though minister of sorrow ;
 Sweet is thy voice at pensive even ;
 And thou, in lovers' hearts forgiven,
 Shalt take thy place with Yarrow !

This poem was translated into Latin verse by the poet's son, and published in the second edition of Yarrow revisited, and other poems, 1835.—ED.

To all that Earth from pensive hearts is stealing,
 And Heaven is now to gladdened eyes revealing,
 Add every charm the Universe can show
 Through every change its aspects undergo—
 Care may be respited, but not repealed ;
 No perfect cure grows on that bounded field.
 Vain is the pleasure, a false calm the peace,

THE linnet's warble, sinking towards a close,
 Hints to the thrush 'tis time for their repose ;
 The shrill-voiced thrush is heedless, and again
 The monitor revives his own sweet strain ;
 But both will soon be mastered, and the copse
 Be left as silent as the mountain-tops,
 Ere some commanding star* dismiss to rest
 The throng of rooks, that now, from twig or nest,
 (After a steady flight on home-bound wings,
 And a last game of mazy hoverings
 Around their ancient grove) with cawing noise
 Disturb the liquid music's equipoise.

O Nightingale ! Who ever heard thy song
 Might here be moved, till Fancy grows so strong
 That listening sense is pardonably cheated
 Where wood or stream by thee was never greeted.*
 Surely, from fairest spots of favoured lands,
 Were not some gifts withheld by jealous hands,
 This hour of deepening darkness here would be
 As a fresh morning for new harmony ;
 And lays as prompt would hail the dawn of Night :
 A dawn she has both beautiful and bright,
 When the East kindles with the full moon's light ;
 Not like the rising sun's impatient glow
 Dazzling the mountains, but an overflow
 Of solemn splendour, in mutation slow.

Wanderer by spring with gradual progress led,
 For sway profoundly felt as widely spread ;
 To king, to peasant, to rough sailor, dear,
 And to the soldier's trumpet-wearied ear ;
 How welcome wouldst thou be to this green Vale
 Fairer than Tempe !† Yet, sweet Nightingale !
 From the warm breeze that bears thee on, alight
 At will, and stay thy migratory flight ;
 Build, at thy choice, or sing, by pool or fount
 Who shall complain, or call thee to account ?

SOFT as a cloud is yon blue Ridge—the Mere*
 Seems firm as solid crystal, breathless, clear,
 And motionless; and, to the gazer's eye,
 Deeper than ocean, in the immensity
 Of its vague mountains and unreal sky!
 But, from the process in that still retreat,
 Turn to minuter changes at our feet;
 Observe how dewy Twilight has withdrawn
 The crowd of daisies from the shaven lawn,
 And has restored to view its tender green,
 That, while the sun rode high, was lost beneath their dazzling sheen.

—An emblem this of what the sober Hour
 Can do for minds disposed to feel its power!
 Thus oft, when we in vain have wish'd away
 The petty pleasures of the garish day,
 Meek eve shuts up the whole usurping host
 (Unbashful dwarfs each glittering at his post)
 And leaves the disencumbered spirit free
 To reassume a staid simplicity.

'Tis well—but what are helps of time and place,
 When wisdom stands in need of nature's grace :
 Why do good thoughts, invoked or not, descend,
 Like Angels from their bowers, our virtues to befriend ;
 If yet To-morrow, unbelied, may say,
 " I come to open out, for fresh display,
 The elastic vanities of yesterday ?"

[Composed by the side of Grasmere lake. The mountains that enclose the vale, especially towards Easdale, are most favorable to the reverberation of sound. There is a passage in the "Excursion" towards the close of the fourth book, where the voice of the raven in flight is traced through the modifications it undergoes, as I have often heard it in that vale and others of this district.*

" Often, at the hour
 When issue forth the first pale stars, is heard,
 Within the circuit of this fabric huge,
 One voice—the solitary raven." ]

THE leaves that rustled on this oak-crowned hill,
 And sky that danced among those leaves, are still ;
 Rest smooths the way for sleep ; in field and bower
 Soft shades and dews have shed their blended power
 On drooping eyelid and the closing flower ;
 Sound is there none at which the faintest heart
 Might leap, the weakest nerve of superstition start ;
 Save when the Owlet's unexpected scream
 Pierces the ethereal vault ; and (mid the gleam
 Of unsubstantial imagery, the dream,
 From the hushed vales' realities, transferred
 To the still lake) the imaginative Bird
 Seems, 'mid inverted mountains, not unheard.

THE LABOURER'S NOON-DAY HYMN.

Comp. 1834. — Pub. 1835.

[Bishop Ken's Morning and Evening Hymns are, as they deserve to be, familiarly known. Many other hymns have also been written on the same subject ; but, not being aware of any designed for noon-day, I was induced to compose these verses. Often one has occasion to observe cottage children carrying, in their baskets, dinner to their Fathers engaged with their daily labours in the fields and woods. How gratifying would it be to me could I be assured that any portion of these stanzas had been sung by such a domestic concert under such circumstances. A friend of mine has told me that she introduced this Hymn into a village-school which she superintended, and the stanzas in succession furnished her with texts to comment upon in a way which without difficulty was made intelligible to the children, and in which they obviously took delight, and they were taught to sing it to the tune of the old 100th Psalm.]

UP to the throne of God is borne
The voice of praise at early morn,
And he accepts the punctual hymn
Sung as the light of day grows dim :

Nor will he turn his ear aside
From holy offerings at noontide :
Then here reposing let us raise
A song of gratitude and praise.

What though our burthen be not light,
We need not toil from morn to night ;
The respite of the mid-day hour
Is in the thankful Creature's power.

Blest are the moments, doubly blest,
That, drawn from this one hour of rest,
Are with a ready heart bestowed
Upon the service of our God !

Each field is then a hallowed spot,<sup>1</sup>
An altar is in each man's cot,
A church in every grove that spreads
Its living roof above our heads.

<sup>1</sup> 1845.

Why should we crave a hallowed spot ?

1835.

Look up to heaven! the industrious Sun
 Already half his race hath run;
He cannot halt nor go astray,
 But our immortal Spirits may.

Lord! since his rising in the East,
 If we have faltered or transgressed,
 Guide, from thy love's abundant source,
 What yet remains of this day's course:

Help with thy grace, through life's short day,
 Our upward and our downward way;
 And glorify for us the west,
 When we shall sink to final rest.

THE REDBREAST.

SUGGESTED IN A WESTMORELAND COTTAGE.

Comp. 1834. — Pub. 1835.

[Written at Rydal Mount. All our cats having been banished the house, it was soon frequented by redbreasts. Two or three of them, when the window was open, would come in, particularly when Mrs Wordsworth was breakfasting alone, and hop about the table picking up the crumbs. My sister being then confined to her room by sickness, as, dear creature, she still is, had one that, without being caged, took up its abode with her, and at night used to perch upon a nail from which a picture had hung. It used to sing and fan her face with its wings in a manner that was very touching.]

DRIVEN in by Autumn's sharpening air
 From half-stripped woods and pastures bare,
 Brisk Robin seeks a kindlier home:
 Not like a beggar is he come,
 But enters as a looked-for guest,
 Confiding in his ruddy breast,
 As if it were a natural shield
 Charged with a blazon on the field,

Due to that good and pious deed
 Of which we in the Ballad read.
 But pensive fancies putting by,
 And wild-wood sorrows, speedily
 He plays the expert ventriloquist ;
 And, caught by glimpses now—now missed,
 Puzzles the listener with a doubt
 If the soft voice he throws about
 Comes from within doors or without !
 Was ever such a sweet confusion,
 Sustained by delicate illusion ?
 He's at your elbow—to your feeling
 The notes are from the floor or ceiling ;
 And there's a riddle to be guessed,
 Till you have marked his heaving chest
 And busy throat whose sink and swell<sup>1</sup>
 Betray the Elf that loves to dwell
 In Robin's bosom, as a chosen cell.

Heart-pleased we smile upon the Bird
 If seen, and with like pleasure stirred
 Commend him, when he's only heard.
 But small and fugitive our gain
 Compared with hers<sup>2</sup> who long hath lain,
 With languid limbs and patient head
 Reposing on a lone sick-bed ;
 Where now, she<sup>3</sup> daily hears a strain

That cheats her<sup>1</sup> of too busy cares,
 Eases her pain, and helps her prayers.<sup>2</sup>
 And who but this dear Bird beguiled
 The fever of that pale-faced Child
 Now cooling, with his passing wing,
 Her forehead, like a breeze of Spring
 Recalling now, with descant soft
 Shed round her pillow from aloft,
 Sweet thoughts of angels hovering nigh,
 And the invisible sympathy
 Of 'Matthew, Mark, and Luke, and John
 Blessing the bed she lies upon?'*
 And sometimes, just as listening ends
 In slumber, with the cadence blends
 A dream of that low-warbled hymn
 Which old folk, fondly pleased to trim
 Lamps of faith, now burning dim,
 Say that the Cherubs carved in stone,
 When clouds gave way at dead of night
 And the ancient church was filled with light,<sup>3</sup>
 Used to sing in heavenly tone,
 Above and round the sacred places
 They guard, with wingèd baby-faces.

Thrice happy Creature ! in all lands
Nurtured by hospitable hands :
Free entrance to this cot has he,
Entrance and exit both yet free ;
And, when the keen unruffled weather
That thus brings man and bird together,
Shall with its pleasantness be past,
And casement closed and door made fast,
To keep at bay the howling blast,
He needs not fear the season's rage,
For the whole house is Robin's cage.
Whether the bird flit here or there,
O'er table lilt, or perch on chair,
Though some may frown and make a stir
To scare him as a trespasser,
And he belike will flinch or start,
Good friends he has to take his part ;
One chiefly, who with voice and look
Pleads for him from the chimney-nook,
Where sits the Dame, and wears away
Her long and vacant holiday ;
With images about her heart,
Reflected from the years gone by
On human nature's second infancy.

NOTE A.

(See p. 166.)

In a letter from Mrs Wordsworth to Lady Beaumont, dated 'Rydal Mount, Dec. 9th,' and probably belonging to the year 1828, the following occurs :—

"I am to send you a corrected copy of Sonnet suggested by you." Then follows the sonnet, as printed below.

It will be observed that what was sent to Lady Beaumont differs throughout from the sonnet as printed in the text ; and that, in the Fenwick note, Wordsworth says it describes "Lady Fitzgerald," and not Lady Beaumont. It is just possible that Mrs Wordsworth meant that it was suggested by Lady Beaumont's description of Lady Fitzgerald ; but the difference between the two versions of the sonnet is noteworthy : and if what Mrs Wordsworth sent to Coleorton was "corrected," we may infer that the poet preferred it to the printed copy in the edition of 1827.

Lady, what delicate graces may unite
In age—so often comfortless and bleak !
Though from thy unenfeebled eye-balls break
Those saintly emanations of delight,
A snow-drop let me name thee ; pure, chaste, white,
Too pure for flesh and blood ; with smooth, blanch'd cheek,
And head that droops because the soul is meek,
And not that Time presses with weary weight.
Hope, Love, and Joy are with thee fresh as fair ;
A Child of Winter prompting thoughts that climb
From desolation towards the genial prime :
Or, like the moon, conquering the misty air
And filling more and more with chrystal light,
As pensive evening deepens into night.
